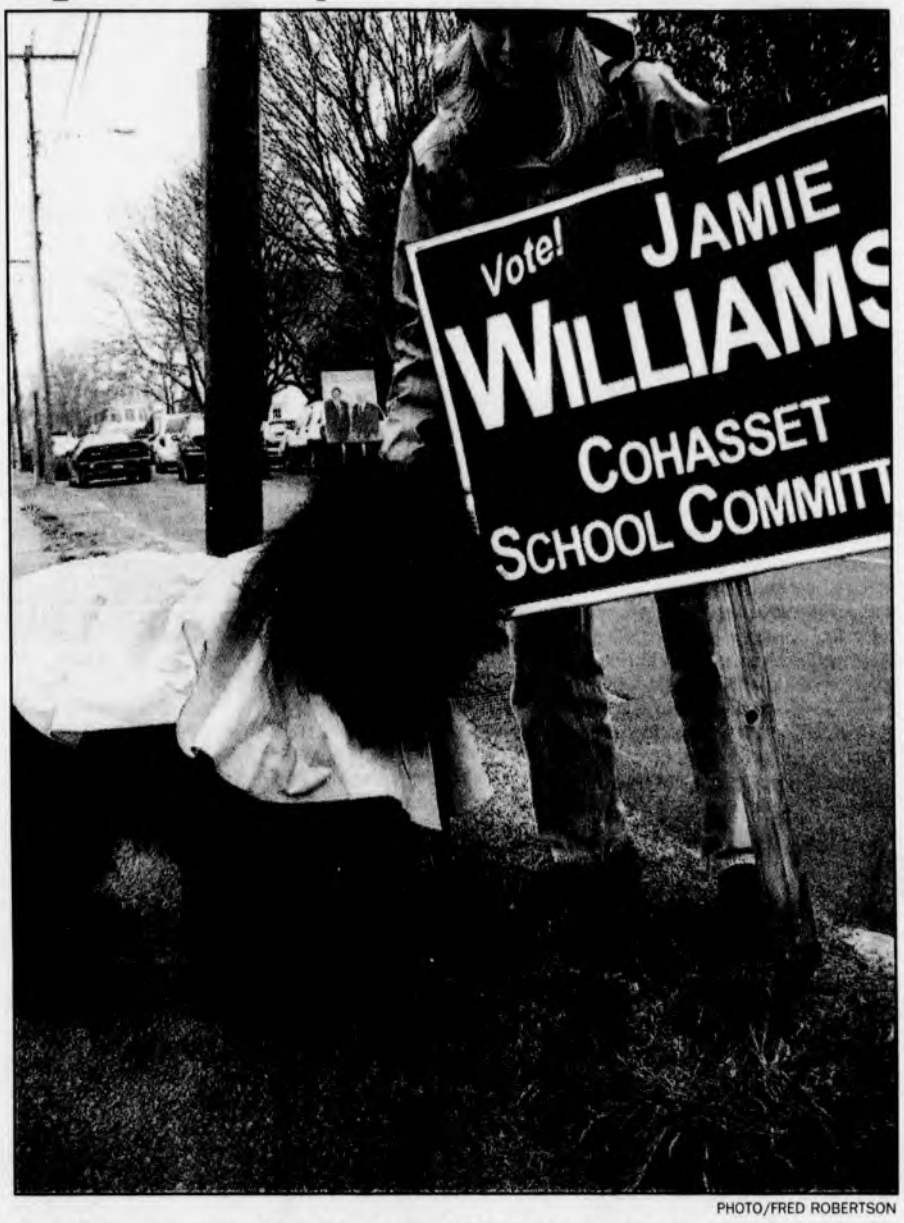
Quad gates still open

Beechwood St. crossing is up in the air

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A diagnostic team for the town of Cohasset said it will recommend four-quadrant gates for at least one of the three grade crossings it was asked to review.



Crossings at lower King Street, Pleasant Street, and Beechwood Street were examined by the team, which consisted of representatives from the MBTA, the town — including both the fire and police chiefs — and MBTA/Cohasset ombudsman Kristina Patterson.

While the experts agreed standard grade crossings with median barriers would be best for King Street due to two residential driveways in close proximity to the crossing and four-quadrant gates at Pleasant Street, discussion will need to continue for Beechwood Street. The team feels there are still issues that should be worked out with abutters before it will feel comfortable making a recommendation.

Eric Fleming of the MBTA explained the difference between the two types of crossings. Standard grade crossings have two gates, located in front of the tracks, only on the side of

Spofford, Dormitzer win selectman seats

It was a mixed message. While opting to increase their taxes through an override that was supported by town and school officials — voters also decided it was time for a "changing of the guard," so to speak, on the board of selectmen and school committee.

Saturday's town election was one of the hottest in recent memory with three races that also included the planning board and a $400,000 ballot question. When all the votes were counted — 2,687 of the town's 5,006 registered voters or about 54 percent went to the polls.

No sooner had the polls closed at 6 p.m. then upwards of 75 people jammed in like sardines at the front of the Town Hall auditorium waiting for the results.

Rob Spofford, 14 Heather Drive, and Ralph Dormitzer, 111 Atlantic Ave., finished first and second respectively in the four-way race for two seats on the board of selectmen. The men edged out Dormitzer's teammate Lou Harvey, 465 King St., and incumbent Merle Brown, 546 Beechwood St., who was seeking a fifth term.

For complete results see page 11.

Jamie Williams, 60 Surry Drive, and Adrienne MacCarthy, 85 Doane St., beat incumbent Pat Martin, 269 Linden Drive, who was seeking a third term, and political newcomer Scott O'Grady, 115 Sohier Street, for two seats on the school committee.

Stuart Ivimey, 7 Sankey Road, emerged as the victor over Joseph Nedrow, 21 Fair Oaks Lane, in a two-way race for a one-year unexpired term on the planning board.

Highland Avenue, part of North Main Street and Robert E. Jason Roads were a sea of political signs Saturday as dozens of campaign workers stood in the cold drizzle rooting for their candidates as voters drove by. It was almost like the wave at Fenway Park, when a car turned the corner onto Highland Avenue – teams of campaign workers greeted each passing vehicle with a ripple of waves along the stretch of roadway.

No sooner had the polls closed at 6 p.m. then upwards of 75 people jammed in like sardines inside the back of the Town Hall auditorium waiting for the results.

Town Moderator George Marlette read the override ballot question results a few minutes later to a mix of cheers and a few loud boos. The override, which needed to win a simple majority, passed with a 151-vote margin (1379-1228) – which was enough for school committee Chairman Rick Flynn.

"We're happy that it passed," Flynn said. "We think it's a win

Look what's hatching at Deer Hill

Lessons learned about lifecycles

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Ten little brown eggs sit in the warmth of an incubator on a table in Deer Hill teacher Suzi Corkhum's classroom. For just over four weeks, students have been patiently waiting to hear the tiny peeps that will indicate the baby chicks are ready to begin breaking out of their shells.

For students, the project is filled with excitement, as each day that passes brings them one day closer to the time the babies will emerge, but for teachers, it provides a wonderful vehicle to teach a lesson on lifecycles and development, which is sure to be unforgettable.

"This is our second year doing the project," said Corkhum, who is one of three fourth-grade teachers hatching chicks. Because students switch classrooms for science and reading, Corkhum, along with Kayne Beaudry, and Pamela McNamara have been teaching life science to students in their homerooms as well as those of Lauren Paquin, Joan Cassiani, and Jennifer Clark, making it a true fourth-grade activity.

The newest addition to Suzi Corkhum's fourth-grade class.

"We're learning a little more each year," Corkhum said.

Corkhum's class currently has 10 healthy looking eggs. Chickens typically have a development cycle of 21 days, and Monday night, at day 21, the first baby began working its way out. The class had two dozen fertilized eggs at the outset of the project, but during the development process, it was determined some were not going to hatch.

Development was monitored by "candling" the eggs. By shining a light on one side of the egg, it allows students to see through the shell to the embryo inside. Any opaque space indicates a baby is growing. At the very beginning, the eggs which did not progress beyond a yolk were discarded. From there, the developing embryos were routinely checked to monitor their growth.

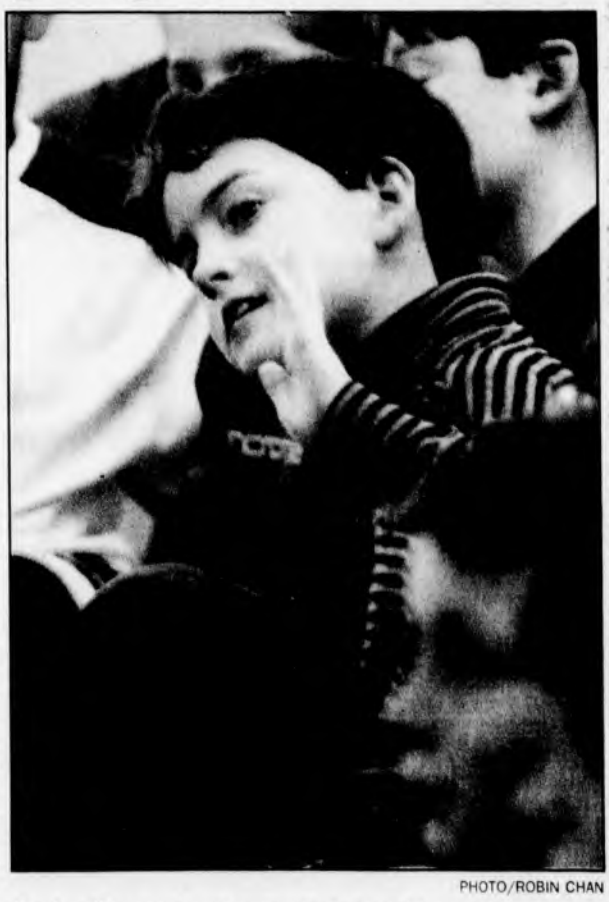
Sign of spring comes to life

4-H program visits school



By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Though the weather might not be a strong indication spring has sprung, there are clear signs of new life at the Deer Hill School as baby chicks in three fourth-grade classes have begun to poke their way out of their shells and into the world.

For Michael Koski, extension educator of 4-H Youth and Family Development, who provided many of the resources needed to hatch the eggs in the classroom, it is an event he looks forward to every year. He said he works to bring lessons to life through the educational programs offered through 4-H.

"We offer a lot of science-based programs," said Koski, which includes life science, physical science, and life skills programs. The embryology program, which is currently taking Deer Hill students through the development of chicks, is one of six life science options, and fits perfectly with the fourth-grade curriculum. Other life science programs focus on plants, entomology (the study of insects)

Gill to replace DeLorenzo as assistant principal

Current Middle-High School Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill will be appointed to fill the position of Assistant Principal at the school when Jack DeLorenzo retires at the end of this school year. "We feel Mike Gill is the right person for the job, he knows the kids and knows the school. We're very pleased," said Supt. Edward Malvey. School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said his board feels Gill is the appropriate choice for the position as well. "He's got the institutional knowledge and has spent a lot of time with Jack, which is an excellent combination," he said.

Supt. Contract voted last week

The School Committee voted to offer incoming Supt. Denise Walsh a flat rate contract with a salary of $120,000 a year. Current Supt. Edward Malvey was paid $134,872.04 during calendar year 2003, which was the highest salary paid in town.

DeGiacomo bids adieu

After six years of serving on the School Committee, Mark DeGiacomo said farewell to his fellow committee members last Thursday night. During a term which saw much change in the schools, including two new superintendents, three new principals, and the opening of the new Osgood school, DeGiacomo said he has enjoyed being a part of some very important decision making over the years.

"I first ran six years ago because I thought it was going to be a very exciting time," he said. "I'm not always right, but boy was I right about that," adding he was School Committee Chairman when the town passed the Deer Hill and Middle-High School override, and was glad to be able to follow the schools as they went through construction and renovations, and their re-opening once more. "It has been a privilege for me to be on the committee and work with everyone to make these changes occur," he said.

DeGiacomo said in the past few weeks, many people have approached him to thank him for his service throughout the years, and "I very much appreciate it."

He said while he's leaving the schools in good — not great, financial shape, he hopes his successor will not have to face making more cuts at their first School Committee meeting.

DeGiacomo, who did not seek reelection, said he wishes everyone on the board the best, and even though he won't be a board member, offered his help in the future. "If you ever do need me, I'll always be here."

School calendar

The School Committee is in the process of finalizing next year's school calendar. Input from the Teacher's Union is being collected, and the calendar will be approved soon. Two drafts of the calendar are being floated, each with a different start date — one before Labor Day and one after. The first option has a start date of Thursday, Sept. 2, and the last day of school would be Friday, June 17. The other option would be to start Wednesday, Sept. 8, and end Wednesday, June 22. Dates for the last day of school could change, depending on the number of snow days.

This year, the official last day of school including snow days to date, is Thursday, June 24.

New board chair

The Board of Selectmen unanimously voted in favor of appointing Michael Sullivan to the position of chairman. Former chairman Ronnie McMorris will serve as vice chairman.

Town could get snow and ice grant

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town submitted a grant application to the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency, to receive funds for the Dec. 6 snowstorm, which was declared a snow emergency. If the town receives the grant, that could mean an extra $34,000 to help offset the snow and ice deficit.

New 15-minute parking spaces

Due to the success of Bia Bistro, the owners of Village Wine & Spirits requested two parking spots in front of their store be designated as 15-minute parking, only on Friday and Saturday nights from 6-11 p.m. The Board of Selectmen approved the request, because the same courtesy was provided for Tedeschi's when business from the Red Lion Inn began parking at its storefront. The change will take place soon, and residents are urged to pay attention so as not to receive a parking ticket.

Alumni Field repairs

Town Manager Mark Haddad said with the Relay for Life scheduled for the third week in June, improvements to Alumni Field will have to begin the week of June 21. He said it will take until approximately Sept. 10 to complete improvements, and the sod will have two weeks to "take" before the first soccer game needs to be played on the field. Because it will be the first soccer game, Haddad said it will be possible for the Cohasset team to swap schedules with the other team, and play the first game away and the second game in Cohasset, should the field need more time. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said from his experience, he thought it would take more time for the sod to take than a couple of weeks, and Haddad said he was told it was athletic sod, which could make a difference.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said in light of the improvements, it would make sense to have someone appointed to make the decision when the field can and cannot be used. If it's too wet, or if the field has been torn up, there should be a point person that makes the call. Haddad said someone will be appointed to make the decisions.

RTF Easter hours

The Recycling Transfer Facility will be closed on Sunday, April 11, in observance of the Easter Holiday.

It will re-open on Wednesday, April 14, the DPW said.

Winter wreaths

Winter wreaths and baskets must be removed from all town owned cemeteries by April 15, the DPW said.

Legion arrests wending their way through court process

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Lawyers for three men who stand accused of breaking the handicapped railing outside the American Legion Hall during an alleged fight last Oct. 11 were back in court Tuesday before yet another judge.

This time the appearance of their clients — Keith Jackson, Jerry Cogill and Adam Thibault — was waived so the three, 20-something men did not have to appear themselves.

The matter was continued again until May 25 for a pre-trial conference when attorney Ron Rice, who is representing Jackson, said he will ask the judge to consider his motion to "sever." If granted, that means Jackson's alleged involvement in the incident would be handled separately from the other two men. All three face the charge of malicious destruction of property valued over $250 for allegedly breaking the railing during a wrestling match that October night.

The case has captured interest because it involves Police Chief Robert Jackson's son, Keith Jackson. Also, the incident is included among several arrests the town has charged Sgt. William Quigley with mishandling. Quigley, who denies any wrongdoing, has been on paid administrative leave since Oct. 20 and could be a witness in a potential trial.

The arrests are part of an ongoing disciplinary hearing at Town Hall involving allegations the sergeant abused police power. In mid-March, the hearings were put on hold for a 45-day "cooling off" period, while both sides attempt to resolve their employment disputes through a structured mediation process. The parties also agreed not to make any comments to the press during this time period.

So far three judges at Quincy District Court have heard various motions as the Jackson-Cogill-Thibault matter wends its way through the legal process: They include Judge Mark Coven, Judge Robert Tochka and Judge Diane Moriarty.

At the last hearing, Feb. 9, the men's attorneys asked Tochka to dismiss the charge of malicious destruction of property. The judge took the matter under advisement.

In an interview Tuesday outside the courtroom, Rice said Tochka did not agree to dismiss the charge and he will ask him to reconsider.

Rice said the evidence shows Keith Jackson did not take part in the alleged fight. Keith Jackson also did not make any statements to police about damage to the railing that night, as the others allegedly did, he said.

Rice said it is likely that this case will go to trial.

"Unless they dismiss it, this is going to trial," Rice said. "The only way it won't is if the defendants admit guilt and that's not going to happen in this case."

The three attorneys, who also include Robert Cohen and William Bowling, have described the altercation to the court as "horsing around" and if the fence was indeed damaged, it was accidental and not intentional.

In a related matter, a Superior Court Judge Robert J. Cordy has upheld Judge Coven's decision not to issue the charges of affray and disorderly conduct, which Sgt. Quigley also charged the three men with that October night. The district attorney's office had appealed Coven's decision not to issue those charges.

Coven did find probable cause to issue the complaint of malicious destruction of property, and Tochka has upheld that decision. However, Rice hopes Tochka will reconsider.

Sandy Beach has a sea of issues

On selectmen's agenda April 13

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Throughout the year, the Board of Selectmen receives many letters and phone calls from residents concerned about Sandy Beach. From closing the entrances to problems with trash, the board hears it all.

In light of that, the selectmen have asked President of the Sandy Beach Association Robin Lawrence to participate in a public discussion, Tuesday, April 13, where residents and the town can come together to work out some of the issues.

One of the issues sure to be taken up is what to do with the entrance points. Over the years, Sandy Beach has had its northern entrance closed and reopened a number of times. Lawrence said most recently, monitoring has only been done at the south end, closest to Cunningham Bridge, and that has been working out well. It has kept down the number of residents trying to enter without a sticker, and slowed down traffic in the parking lot because there is only one opening to enter and exit through. The land the fire hydrant is on has almost formed a natural rotary for cars, which Lawrence said is also working out well.

However, Lawrence said there are line of sight issues when exiting, although to his knowledge there has not been an accident at that spot in roughly 20 years. He said he would like to see measures taken to improve safety, which could include the installation of parabolic mirrors on two telephone polls on either side of the entrance, and perhaps the trimming of some beach grass to help improve visibility.

While the alternative of moving the entrance to the middle of the parking lot has been floated as a way to help improve visibility, Lawrence said he is not in favor, as there will still be visibility issues due to the curves in the road, and the telephone polls are too far apart at that point to install parabolic mirrors. In addition, changing the entrance would require removing part of a dune, and once it's gone, "You've destroyed that forever." Sand from the beach would also very likely blow through the open space during the winter, he said, bringing it either onto Atlantic Avenue or clear across the street into Little Harbor.

Another problem facing Sandy Beach is the amount of trash that needs to be picked up regularly. Town Manager Mark Haddad said it's costing overtime for the Department of Public works, and trash is piling up anyway. Lawrence said the beach had its own dumpster a few years ago, and wondered if that could be a viable solution.

Beach stickers will also be discussed, as many residents have asked about being able to purchase a one-day pass for visiting friends or relatives. In addition, raising sticker fees by a minimal cost could be discussed as a way of maintaining services at the beach. Because the Sandy Beach Association is responsible for much of the upkeep of the beach, and only 20 percent of residents contribute to the Sandy Beach Association, there may need to be an increase in fees to keep the beach clean.

All concerned residents are asked to attend the Selectmen's meeting Tuesday, April 13 at 7:30 to discuss Sandy Beach issues.

Disabled veterans to meet at Glastonbury

The Lt. Ralph Talbot Disabled American Veterans Chapter 65 is sponsoring an information-sharing meeting to be held on Saturday, May 1, beginning at 9:30 a.m. and not lasting more than about one hour at the new Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center.

Chapter 65 "Serves Those Who Served" in the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth. They perpetuate the memory of fallen comrades, assist members and their families who are in need and keep the membership advised of their benefit entitlements. Of particular note is the role the National Service Officers play in providing free representation for those who need help in presenting disability claims to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

DAV membership eligibility is open to anyone wounded, injured, or disabled during honorable service or while engaged in extra-hazardous service under conditions simulating war.

The DAV hopes that the meeting will result in added memberships and more active participation in the local Chapter so that they can continue to help those who have suffered from the horrific wounds of war. A National Service Officer from the JFK Federal Building, as well as veterans' agents from the six towns have been invited.

The Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center is on the left-hand side of Rte 228, about / mile beyond the intersection of Rtes 228 and 3A. As you near the Abbey, the road splits and you should bear left toward Hull(not Cohasset), take the first left after the main driveway. The Conference Center is handicapped accessible with parking.

Hedlund backs bill to ease tax burden for senior citizens

Seniors caught in the middle of spiraling real estate values and state budget cuts stand to get a break on their property tax bills thanks to legislation the State Senate passed on Thursday. The bill makes easier for the elderly to qualify for state tax credits and allows communities to offer them property tax exemptions and lower interest rates on taxes they can defer paying until the home is sold.

"This bill offers a ray of hope for many senior on fixed incomes who face skyrocketing property tax bills as communities cope with budget cuts and factor in escalating property assessments," Hedlund said. "The tax breaks and credits to which they would be eligible could mean the difference in holding on to the their homes or being forced to sell."

The legislation contains several initiatives in which seniors can realize savings on one of their biggest household expenditures:

- Property Tax Exemption – a local option to offer a new property tax exemption equal to 10 percent of the average assessed value of the property in a city or town. Communities could also increase this exemption up to 20 percent.
- Property Tax Deferral – allows cities and towns to set a lower interest rate on any property taxes a senior might postpone paying until the property is sold. Currently, the statutory rate is 8 percent. Communities could also adopt higher qualifying income levels to become eligible for the property tax deferral option.
- Increase Work-off Limit – increase the limit on the amount of property taxes that may be "worked off" by seniors through volunteering in the communities, from $750 to $1,000.
- Increase Circuit Breaker Eligibility – Seniors living on fixed incomes are eligible for a state income tax credit that is triggered when property taxes exceed 10 percent of their income. The eligibility limit for the credit on assessed property values will rise to $600,000 from $432,000. Beginning Jan. 1, 2005, the new assessed property value will be indexed to housing values rather than inflation.

"The Circuit Breaker program alone is credited with helping more than 31,000 senior citizens last year, saving them nearly $8.5 million on their property taxes," added Senator Hedlund. "We want to insure that they know this help is available to them."

The legislation, which now goes to the House of Representatives for further approval, also calls on the Secretary of State to create a statewide program to inform seniors of available tax relief programs.

IMPORTANT
ATTENTION: COHASSET SEWER USERS WITH GRINDER PUMPS (INTERON BOXES)

There has been a change of service to all customers with grinder pumps, previously if you had an alarm or sewer backup Rosano-Davis would be the service provider to call. Recently the Town has changed contractors. Now all Sewer Customers must call either the Wastewater Treatment Plant at 781-383-1519 or Williamson Electric at: 800-287-9000 or 617-394-5060.

As previously advised before, it is necessary for the Commission to back charge our Sewer Customers for the Town's cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls and we advise you to please discontinue the introduction of the following items into the Sewer System: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary napkins, shells, towels.

Spofford, Dormitzer win selectman seats for the town. Asking for an override is something that we didn't want to have to do but the money was the absolute minimum needed.

"We're still cutting three teachers with that override," he said.

Once all the write-ins were tabulated, Marlette read the rest of the results, starting with the selectmen's race.

Spofford said he was overwhelmed by the support he received in both voting precincts.

"We ran a positive campaign and feel the community responded well to my message as well as all my hard work," said Spofford, who served nine years on the School Building Committee. "Given the turn of events I'm sorry I will not have the opportunity to work with Merle Brown, who has served the town so well for the past 12 years as selectman."

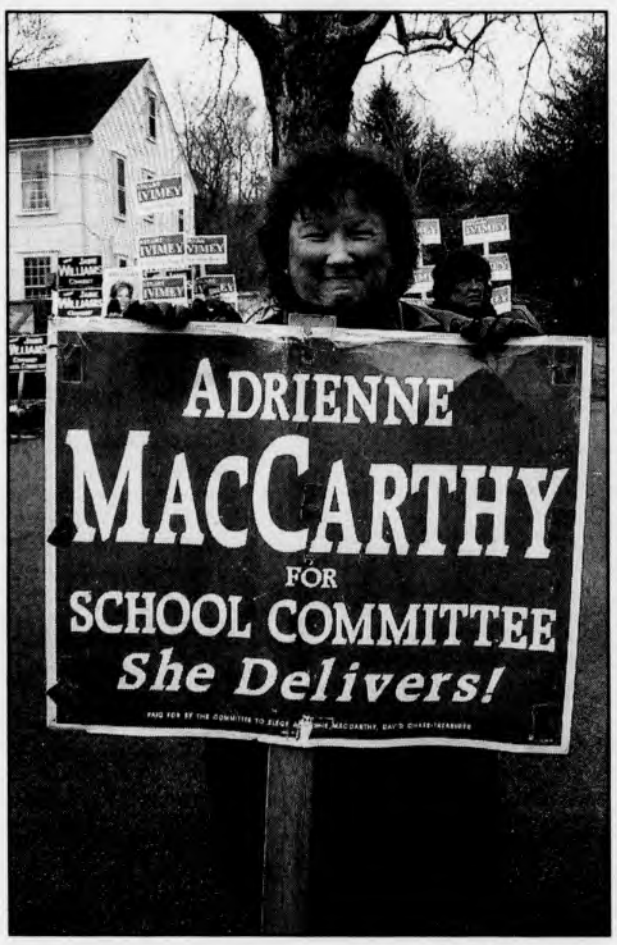
Dormitzer said while he's happy to have won, he's disappointed that the other half of his team, Lou Harvey, did not

"I would have preferred to have Lou (Harvey) on board with me because we are philosophically closer," Dormitzer said. He said getting three votes on the board on controversial issues will be "tougher now." Challenges facing the board are getting a handle on the budget, the ongoing police issue and access to the town sewer system.

Williams, like the others, was trying to warm up after nearly 10 hours outside the polls.

"I am so thrilled and so proud will serve the community to the best of my ability," said Williams, who was the top vote-getter in the four-way school committee race. "I thank everyone so much for their support."

MacCarthy said she is excited to have been elected to the school committee, which does "important work."



"I'm happy to step up to the plate," she said. "A lot of people have put their trust in me and I hope to do a good job."

Ivimey, who said he will continue to serve on the Community Preservation Committee, was pleased with his victory.

"I'm very happy and I have a lot of people to thank for that," Ivimey said. "I'm looking forward to working with the planning board in moving the town forward."

The last time there was a brand-new face on the board of selectmen was five years ago when Fred Koed was elected.

But Monday morning, change was in the air — the nameplates on the selectmen's desk for Tom Callahan, who did not seek a third term, and Brown — were temporarily covered over with hand-made cards with the names Spofford and Dormitzer written in magic marker.

Quad gates issue is still open

the street where a driver stops. The gates extend only to the yellow line on both sides. In the event a driver makes it through the gate before it comes down, the other side is open, and the driver can exit with no obstruction. Because a whistle provides a certain amount of safety value, and Greenbush will be a whistle-free zone, the addition of median barriers at standard crossings will be implemented. With a median barrier in the center of the road, which resembles a traffic island, it becomes more difficult for drivers to sneak around the gates.

With four-quad gates, the first set of gates come down in front of the tracks in front of the driver, and then a delayed second set is lowered on the exit side of the tracks. One of the problems with four-quad gates is the issue of being trapped in between. "People don't act rationally. These are like toll booths, you can drive right through the gates," said Fleming, but many people freeze on the tracks.

Greenbush towns have been unanimous in seeking four-quad gates rather than standard grade crossing treatments with median barriers. The towns feel four-quad gates are safer and eliminate the need for median barriers that divide the roadway and could negatively impact neighborhoods.

The diagnostic team believes a standard crossing will be the best alternative for the Beechwood Street crossing, because as a major road in town, the least amount of time it is blocked, the better. Four-quad gates will delay traffic for longer than a standard crossing gate would, and with emergency vehicles frequenting the street, any delay could affect public safety.

However, the driveway at 39 Beechwood St. runs parallel to the tracks at the Beechwood Street crossing, which is causing some of the discussion over which gates are more appropriate. While the diagnostic team wants to implement a standard crossing, residents who live in the five-unit condominium building at 39 Beechwood St., say they would prefer four-quad, which would eliminate the need to redirect their driveway, as standard gates would require.

Pamela Palmer, one of the residents at 39 Beechwood St., said while the residents want to work cooperatively, and realize it is a difficult crossing, they would like to see the driveway kept in tact because the layout as currently proposed will require a sharp curve in their driveway, which will make plowing difficult in the winter as well as affect the aesthetics of the front yard. Residents say they are already being affected by living next to the train and would like to see their property stay the same wherever possible. With four-quad gates installed, there would be no need to redirect the driveway. "We really are concerned with public safety issues as well as 39 Beechwood Street issues," she said, adding residents are eager to come to a compromise.

However, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said currently, the department is averaging a four-minute response time to some of the homes on the farthest areas of Beechwood Street, and having a delay at any point in that road will be a hazard to public safety. "I can't live with three additional minutes. Quadrant gates don't work there for me," he said.

"I think we have a problem," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, adding while he understands the concerns of abutters, when a team of experts all say a standard crossing is the way to go, and that public safety will be affected with four-quad gates, "How could we vote against that."

The diagnostic team said it will take more time to work with the abutters to see if any creative solutions can be devised, and that it will come back before selectmen in the near future with a recommendation for the site.

Welcomed into the Habitat family

Condo resold after 11 years

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Casey Ahrens, 11, might have a future in real estate. The fifth-grader proudly describes his new home at 43 Elm St., noting the number of bedrooms and baths to anyone that asks.

It's a place where he and his two sisters, mom and dad, and dog Buffie have called theirs for the past seven months.

Not being able to afford a home at today's market-rates, the Ahrens family moved from rental to rental over the past few years, most recently living in Marshfield and Hull. But they never gave up their dream of home ownership — one that South Shore Habitat for Humanity has helped make a reality.

"We have a whole new life and it's the greatest thing in the world."

— Robert Ahrens, Habitat homeowner

Saturday afternoon, the Ahrens' home was formally dedicated in a special ceremony organized by Habitat, a non-profit ecumenical, Christian ministry formed in 1986 in Massachusetts that is affiliated with Habitat for Humanity International.

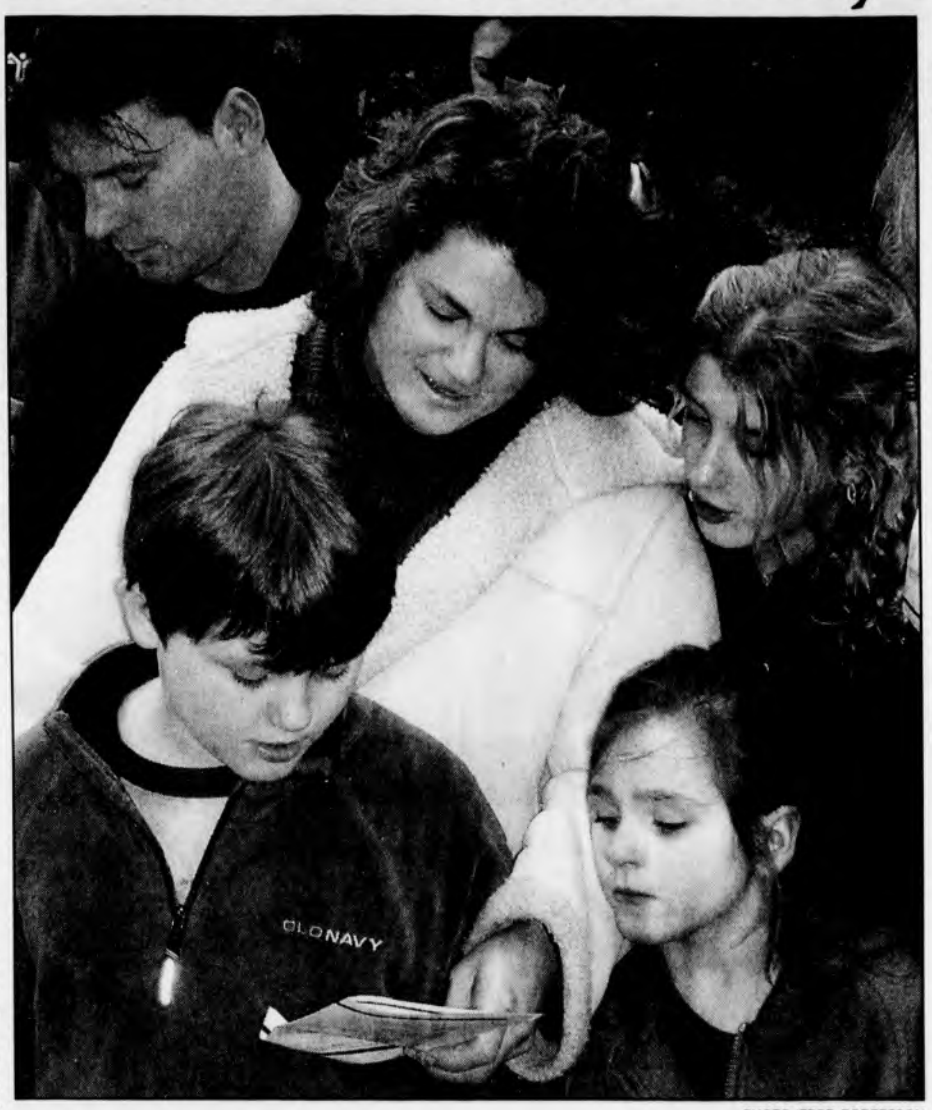
Robert Ahrens' eyes welled with tears more than once as the program got underway.

"We went through such a hard time," said Robert, who is the chef at The Cove, a Hingham restaurant. "But our family stayed close…we have a whole new life and it's the greatest thing in the world."

The Ahrens' home is in the former Bates Hall that the town "sold" to Habitat for $1 after Town Meeting endorsed the idea in the early '90s. Shortly thereafter, a small army of Habitat volunteers from all walks of life turned the historic structure — which housed Philander Bates' bootmaking shop in the 19th century — into a duplex with two affordable units for two needy families.

The Ahrenses are the second Habitat family to buy the downstairs unit. To qualify for housing, a family must show a severe housing need; must meet Habitat income guidelines; and provide 500 hours in "sweat equity" toward their home.

Homes are paid for through 20-year, zero-interest mortgages financed through Habitat. Mortgage payments are "recycled" as an on-going fund to help build more Habitat homes, which are constructed through donated labor. Materials are either donated or obtained at cost. A perpetual deed restriction maintains the affordability status of each home.



Habitat bought the condo unit back from the prior owner, Lynda Kearns, who paid about $48,000 for it back in 1993, for the amount she had in equity plus a cost of living index per year, plus the cost of some improvements she made. Habitat sold the home to the Ahrenses for $69,500 that included the cost of repairs made by Habitat and replacement of some appliances. Families qualifying for Habitat homeownership in Cohasset must have a minimum gross income of $23,000 and a maximum for $39,000 for a family of six or more. Habitat's income guidelines are 25-50 percent of the area's median.

John Seavey, a Cohasset resident, who is chairman of the family selection committee, said the Ahrens family performed their sweat equity on Habitat houses being built in Marshfield and Norwell; they also helped out at the organization's office in Braintree.

Diane Ahrens, who works as a waitress at the Silver Spoon on South Main Street, said the family feels right at home in Cohasset.

"The people here have been so friendly," she says. "We couldn't be happier — we feel like we belong."

If the opaque space inside an egg continually grows larger, that is a good indicator the baby chick inside is developing properly. "If you can't see through the egg, there is more than likely a healthy chick inside," Corkhum said. If there was any indication along the way that the embryo had stopped growing, she said she used the opportunity to show the students what the embryos looked like during the various stages of development.

Corkhum said there are three conditions needed in order to have a good hatch. First, the eggs need to be kept warm, which is why an incubator is necessary. Second, there needs to be humidity in the environment, and third, the eggs need to be rotated three times a day. "We're mimicking what the mother would do in nature," Corkhum said.

Students in Corkhum's class are very excited for the chicks to hatch. Kyle Studley said of the entire process, having the babies hatch is going to be the best part. Danielle Frederick said once the babies do hatch, she can't wait to find out how many are boys and how many are girls.

But aside from the excitement of having the babies hatch, the Kyle and Danielle said having the eggs in the classroom has taught them a lot about development. "I never knew they developed in 21 days," Kyle said. Danielle added while she knew chicks had to peck their way out of their shell, she didn't know it's called "pipping." Kyle added, "They pip with their egg tooth," which is on the end of their beaks, and helps the baby bird break through the tough shell.

The Deer Hill teachers were able to run the baby chick program in their classroom with the help of 4-H School Programs, which provided the fertile eggs as well as support materials, and are available should teachers have any questions along the way. Extension Educator Michael Koski paid a visit to the school the day the babies were slated to hatch, bringing three week old chicks with him, to give students an idea of what to expect (see related story). Once the babies hatch, they will remain in the classroom until April 16 — the Friday before April vacation. The chicks will then go to live with a student who has volunteered to adopt them.

To help prepare students for the new arrivals, Koski paid the fourth grade a visit, bringing live chicks with him that had hatched only three weeks before. Each child was allowed to hold the chicks, and Koski spent time talking with them about the process of development, answering the many questions they had about what to expect when the babies arrive.

Just before the chicks hatch, Koski told students to listen for them to begin to chirp inside their shells. In nature, when a mother hears her babies, she knows to get off the eggs to give them room to hatch. Koski also explained that hens can only lay one egg per day because their bodies take 22 hours to produce an egg.

When the chicks hatch, Koski said it is important the students not pick them up for two to three days. He explained during those first days outside the egg, the chick's skin will grow over the yolk, which the chicks needed for food inside the egg. After those first couple of days, their bellies firm up and are no longer delicate.

Koski told students when they do hold their chicks there is a good chance they will get pecked. Because baby chicks are born with the instinct to look for water, they will peck at any shiny object they see, which includes fingernails, especially with nail polish. "Let them peck you so you know it doesn't hurt," he suggested.

Chicks in nature must know who their mother is because hens and roosters do not take kindly to chicks from other families. In light of that, many baby chicks born from an incubator will tend to think the first animate object they see after they hatch is their mother. Koski said if the chicks were hatched at home, with the same constant caregiver, the chick would grow up to follow that person around as if it was its mother.

Until only recently, Koski said there was no way to tell whether a chicken was a boy or a girl until it reached maturity at six months, and either crowed like a rooster or laid an egg. However, he said it has been determined that when chicks have a light-feathered mother and a dark-feathered father, which the Deer Hill chicks do, the girls will be born with dark feathers and the boys with light.

Because Koski works for 4-H, he has the resources to be able to give students additional preparation tips. By feeling prepared, students will be able to handle the hands-on responsibility of taking care of the chicks.

In addition to the programs 4-H offers to area schools, it also has a club program where students can continue exploring their interests on an after-school basis.

"Almost anything can be a 4-H club," Koski said, provided they reflect the motto, "learn by doing." Current club topics range from raising a dairy cow, to sewing, to chess. "We have a fife and drum club which has been around for 20 years," Koski said, adding there are many more topics that haven't been explored.

"Fishing could be a great 4-H club," he said, adding the only requirement to start a club is a volunteer adult leader. Adults must provide three references as well as pass a criminal background check.

There is a $25 enrollment fee to join 4-H, and all clubs are open to members between five and 18 years old. Once enrolled, there is no limit to the amount of clubs a person can join. "The kids choose what to belong to," Koski said, adding everyone participating is happy to be there sharing their interests. Since most clubs participate in some kind of community service project, Koski said he thinks 4-H is allowing children to make a difference in their communities while learning about responsibility and self-discipline.

For more information on 4-H please contact Michael Koski at (781) 293-3541, or visit the Massachusetts 4-H web site at www.mass4h.org.

Three beautiful baby girls make their debut in town

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

THANK HEAVENS...

Thank heavens for little girls.... Three beautiful baby girls have joined us here in Cohasset. Calliope Katherine Lanier was born March 23, 2004 at 9:36 p.m. She weighed 5 pounds and 13 ounces and was 19 inches long. The delivery was at the Brigham and Woman's Hospital in Boston. The parents are Anthony and Carlene Lanier. Calliope has an older sister, Alexandra, who will be 5 years old in June.

Tucker and Megan Hansen are delighted to announce the birth of their daughter, Sophia Louise, on March 18, 2004. Sophia's grandparents are Char and Larry Hansen and Suzanne and David Terry, all of Cohasset. Enjoy Miss Sophia with lots of hugs and kisses!

Brooke Elisabeth Evans joined big brother Alex and big sister Caroline at home on Jan. 15, 2004 weighing in at 7 lb. 6 oz. and was 19-1/2 ins. long. Rich and Lisa (mom and dad) are thrilled with their new addition and everyone is just loving this little girl to pieces. Grandparents Anne and Frank Evans, who live on Cape Cod, and Bob and Eileen Ferreira who live here in town are equally delighted. Congratulations to you all on your sweet new baby girl.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

A few Happy Birthday wishes are being sent out to some pretty special people.

John Mello is turning 80 years young tomorrow and to take a look at him, you would never know. Johnny's wife Diane, along with Tom, Barbara, Bobbi (she flew in from Florida for the celebration), Bill, Maryanne, Rick and Betsy all surprised Johnny last Saturday by having a limousine for the evening and enjoying each other and a birthday meal at Siros restaurant. Happy Birthday to you John and many, many more!

This next message is being sent to a special mom from her four wonderful kiddos. "Dear Momma, you are pretty. I like it when you hug me and play with me. Have a happy birthday and yummy cake. Love, Kyle." "Hi Momma, can I open your presents? Happy Birthday, Love Davie." "Momma, you are my best friend. I am your little girl and I don't need binkies anymore. Happy Birthday, Love Bridget." Joshua is too little to say the words but his smiles and adoration shows each time he sees you. Have a very happy birthday Anne from your children, family and friends.

SKILLS COMPETITION

Elyse Portonova, a student at South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School, recently participated in the Skills USA-VICA competition against other schools. Each student took a written test of trade-related questions and a test with measures their employ-ability skills. Elyse will compete in the job interview contest on the state level later this month. Elyse, keep up all the hard work and you will continue to go far. Congratulations.

ST. SEBASTIAN'S HONORS

Paul Cotter, a junior, earned honors with distinction for the third quarter at St. Sebastian's School in Needham. Paul is the son of Dr. Paul and Margaret Cotter. Great work, Paul.

COACHES CLINIC

Attention all Cohasset Baseball and Softball coaches and parents: There will be a mandatory coaches' clinic for all individuals interested in coaching in the Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Association program. To accommodate each of our busy schedules, interested individuals have the option of attending one of two required scheduled clinics. Parents who are interested in learning appropriate baseball / softball instructional techniques are also welcome to attend these sessions. Even the most astute coach always picks up a pointer or two. These meetings are scheduled at the Cohasset High School gym on either Saturday, April 10 from 9 to 10 a.m. or Thursday, April 15 from 7:30 to 9:30p.m..

The CYBSA is fortunate to have Lou Rettman, minor league scout and local baseball instructor, conducting both sessions. In addition, we're also lucky to have Al Galotta, the CHS varsity baseball coach attending the Saturday session and Frank Niles of South Shore Baseball attending the Thursday session.

Immediately following the Saturday, April 10 clinic, there will be player drafts for the softball, minor league baseball and farm league divisions. In addition, divisional schedules, Little League and local CYBSA rules and other helpful coaching material will be distributed on that day. Little League now requires background checks on all league volunteers to ensure the safety of the children entrusted to its care.

Should you be interested in coaching and have not already done so, please bring a photocopy of your license to the clinic where you will be asked to fill out the necessary forms. Individuals, however well intentioned, not complying will not be allowed to coach. Questions regarding this requirement may be confidentially directed to Liam O'Connell on (781) 388-9538. Any questions concerning these coaching sessions may directed to Mark Chase on (781) 383-9122. Questions regarding the League draft may also be directed to Liam on (781) 383-9538.

Cohasset resident Claire M. Cahill, RN, received an award recognizing her years of service to patients at Caritas St. Elizabeth's Medical Center of Boston.

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

PREPARING FOR SUMMER CAMP EXPERIENCE WITH YOUR CHILD

"Summer camp is more than a vacation for children," says Bruce Muchnick, Ed.D., a licensed psychologist who works extensively with day and resident camps. "As a parent, there are a few things to consider to increase the opportunity for a rewarding camp experience for your child." Some helpful suggestions provided by Dr. Muchnick and the American Camping Association of New England include:

Consider camp as a learning experience.
This is an opportunity for your child to explore a world bigger than his/her neighborhood and a chance for you and your child to practice "letting go." Letting go allows children to develop autonomy and a stronger sense of self, make new friends, develop new social skills, learn about teamwork, be creative, and more. This time also allows parents an opportunity to take care of themselves so that they will feel refreshed when their child returns home.

Prepare for camp together.
Decisions about camp — like where to go and what to pack — should be a joint venture, keeping in mind your child's maturity. If your child feels a part of the decision-making process, his/her chances of having a positive experience will improve.

Talk about concerns.
As the first day of camp nears, some children experience uneasiness about going away. Encourage your child to talk about these feelings rather than acting on what you think his/her feelings may be. Communicate confidence in your child's ability to handle being away from home.

Have realistic expectations.
Camp, like the rest of life, has high and low points. Not every moment will be filled with wonder and excitement. Encourage your child to have a reasonable and realistic view of camp. Discuss both the ups and downs your child may experience. Your child should not feel pressured to succeed at camp, either. The main purposes of camp are to relax and have fun.

Chamberlain honored with award

"Modern Healthcare," the nation's only healthcare business news weekly, honored Cohasset's Doug Chamberlain, Chairman of the Franciscan Hospital for Children's Board of Trustees and Founder/President of Appleton Partners, with its 2004 Trustee of the Year award.

Chamberlain, founder and president of a local investment management firm, Appleton Partners, joined the Franciscan Hospital for Children Board of Trustees in 1987.

Since 1987, Chamberlain has helped the hospital through two turnarounds, a name change, and a substantial increase in endowments. Chamberlain became board Chairman in 1995 and led the efforts of the Board of Trustees to restore the fiscal health of the Hospital at a time when its survival was at risk and the potential discontinuation of services a reality.

Since he took over as Chairman, the Hospital has added 35 services which helped raise the operating budget to $37.5 million by 2002. As a result of these improvements, the American Hospital Association honored the Hospital in 1997 with the "Turnaround Hospital of the Year Award" for its financial soundness, pursuit of mission and responsiveness to community.

In September of 2002, the Franciscan Hospital for Children honored Chamberlain during the Hospital's annual Community Leadership Award Dinner for his many years of commitment and support.

In addition to his service to the Hospital, Chamberlain is involved with the Boston Academy of Music and several national historical organizations. He is a member of the Advisory Board of Boston University's Graduate Management program and received the Alumni of the Year Award from the University in 2002.

Split decision

Saturday's election will no doubt go down as one of the most interesting in recent memory.

Those of us who are energized by the political process will be analyzing this one for some time to come. It makes you wish you were a guest on one of those Sunday morning talk shows where those on both sides and in the middle put their spin on the results.

While the override passed by 151 votes — considering the large turnout — it's clear the town was split on the tax hike. There's no question the town is well managed financially and that Town Manager Mark Haddad and Finance Director Michael Buckley are great "number-crunchers." But Haddad and Buckley both work for the town and are ultimately going to do what the voters and elected officials decide. In other words, they can work and rework the numbers but those who set priorities and policy are going to have to ultimately determine where any efficiencies, consolidations and savings can be made. We don't know what the answers are, but we do know that overrides should not be an annual event because, apart from the tax increase, they are too divisive.

Voters also opted for some new faces on town boards. We want to congratulate the winners who ran in contested races: selectmen Ralph Dormitzer and Rob Spofford; school committee members Jamie Williams and Adrienne MacCarthy and planning board member Stuart Ivimey. They all fought hard to win.

We don't believe the "changing of the guard" was a reflection of the jobs incumbent selectman Merle Brown and school committee member Pat Martin were doing on their respective boards. We think voters wanted change on those two major boards, and it would have been difficult for any incumbent to have won in their position. We've covered Brown and Martin for years and found them dedicated, direct and hard working.

However, the baton has been passed and as, MacCarthy says, a lot of trust has been placed on the winners.

The planning board is also going to be interesting to watch in the months ahead. Ivimey is not the only new member; Mike Westcott, who led the fight against Avalon, ran uncontested for a five-year term.

The winners and those who lost this time around, all deserve our thanks for getting involved. We'd also like to congratulate all the candidates who ran unopposed and wish them well on their respective boards, committees and commissions.

Our sincere hope is that any "war wounds" from the recent campaigns will soon heal. In the end, we are all neighbors who all share the same love for Cohasset.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Brown resigns from boards he served on

TO THE EDITOR:

Merle Brown provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter to the Board of Selectmen.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Mark Haddad, the Board of Selectmen and so many of the town employees for the many wonderful years I have had serving with them. The Town of Cohasset has a lot of wonderful employees and I would like to go on record as whole hardly supporting them. I would also like to thank the citizens that have supported me over the years. I hope I have helped in some way to continue to shape Cohasset into one of the most desirable places to live.

During my 23-plus years of volunteering for the town, I have met so many wonderful people. I wish there would be space on this letter to name them all. There is no question that I will miss being involved but the people of the town have spoken loud and clear that it is time for change. I hope the promises of change will be kind to all of Cohasset's citizens regardless of their age and economic status.

With that being said, I hereby tender my resignation from the following Boards: the Recycling Committee, the South Shore Recycling Co-Op, the Wastewater Committee, the Zoning Advisory Committee, the Norfolk County Advisory Board and the MMA Policy and Transportation Committee.

I hope the Town, as a whole, and the Board of Selectmen continue to support Mark Haddad as Town Manager. I have worked with Mark over the last 7 years and because of him, our transition from a Town Administrator to a Town Manager type of government has brought all town departments together. During the campaign, comments were made that there needs to be some control taken from the town manager position. I hope before there is any change that those at the helm look closely at what they want to change (if needed) to be for the very best interest of the entire town. As stated in the MMA Group report, the employees, and the many boards, and committees have worked very hard to keep Cohasset the great town it is with the minimum amount of employees. I would like to suggest that the Government Structure Committee be reactivated to look into any suggested changes before they are made. I also hope someone steps up to the plate to take over the Recycling and the many other things that need to be followed very closely.

In closing, again I wish to thank the many people that have supported me during my 23 years of association and involvement. Your questions, suggestions and sometimes criticisms helped me accomplish so much. Serving the Town has been a privilege and a rewarding experience. I hope you will continue to support those who have given of themselves to this great town.

Brown's service is appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to express my appreciation to Merle Brown for his 12 years of service on the Board of Selectmen. The town is fortunate to have been represented by Merle, who willingly devoted an enormous amount of his time to help make Cohasset an even better place to live. His dedication to a variety of issues also led to his representing the town on a number of regional and county boards. His participation has been invaluable to those who worked with him.

Our community has been well served by Merle's progressive leadership, his independent thinking and his infectious positive attitude. Many thanks to a great friend, neighbor and role model. I've been honored to work with him.

Why did paramedics have to take out an ad?

TO THE EDITOR:

Having grown up in Cohasset, I have experienced firsthand the professionalism and dedication provided to all town residents by both the Cohasset firefighters and paramedics. For that reason, I was shocked and dismayed to see that this same organization was forced to take out a paid advertisement on page 13of the Cohasset_Mariner (April 1.2004). Many residents and representatives of other local interest groups and town organizations utilize the Letters to the "Editor" function in the Mariner. Why was this group forced to take out a paid advertisement to defend their competency? Why was this group not offered an article or a chance to write some "commentary" that so often frequents the pages of the Mariner?

Upon reading the advertisement I was impressed and appreciative of all the time and effort these individuals have devoted to the town in order to maintain a high level of excellence. The listed qualifications and training of those serving us are above reproach. These same qualifications and levels of educational training that the Cohasset paramedics have received and continue to update is the very definition of the word competency.

As a local paper serving the community, the Mariner should begin to utilize their format better and use their space accordingly. Why does a letter asking people to slow down their vehicles on a certain road get space but a pertinent issue such as this does not?

We should be respectful and appreciative of these public servants for all the services they provide town residents.

Kaitlin Jackson
9 Ash St.

(Editor's note: The firefighter/paramedics did not submit a letter to the editor or inquire about doing so. They chose to take out a paid advertisement).

Water quality report misleading

TO THE EDITOR:

As Cohasset residents, we were recently sent the 2004 Water Quality Report which covers the period from January 1 to Dec. 31, 2003. The report stated that "...we are pleased to report that our drinking water meets or exceeds all applicable drinking water standards." That is a very misleading statement!

How many residents read further than this statement? If you did read further, you would have seen (on page 2) that two potentially carcinogenic contaminants, trihalomethanes and haloacetic acid (both byproducts of chlorination), were detected at levels exceeding maximum allowable concentrations. The highest detected level for trihalomethanes was 126.5 ppb (parts per billion); the maximum level allowed is 80 ppb. The highest detected level for haloacetic acid was 108.7 ppb; the maximum level allowed is 60 ppb.

Even according to this Water Report, "some people who drink water containing trihalomethanes in excess of the MCL (maximum contaminant level allowed) over many years experience problems with their liver, kidneys, or central nervous system. They may have an increased risk of getting cancer." Increased risk of cancer is also associated with haloacetic acid, according to the Report (see page 3).

Just because we are a small town and are not required to test for these contaminants (but voluntarily do so) does not justify the Cohasset Water Department position that there are no violations or exceedences of any applicable water quality regulations. In fact, if we were a town of 10,000 population we would be in violation of EPA drinking water quality regulations.

It is interesting to note that in the April, 2003 issue of Boston magazine, which rated the healthiest towns in the area, the following was stated..."Cohasset shows high rates of some cancers, which environmentalists fear may be due to byproducts of chlorination in the water" (pg. 78). Further in the article, Cohasset is listed as having higher than expected rates of breast cancer and prostate cancer.

As Cohasset residents, we are concerned about the health risks associated with the quality of the Cohasset water supply. We are also very concerned about the misleading report issued by the Cohasset Water Commission.

Spofford thanks his team, voters

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of myself, and my family, I'd like to thank all of the voters who came and participated in last Saturday's annual elections. The near record turnout proved once again that Cohasset residents believe strongly in the importance of civic involvement and

HEALTH NOTES

Exercise is key to good health

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Most of us have, at one time or other been in an exercise program. However, more people should realize that sustained exercise is a key pathway to good health. Those parts of your body which aren't used enough soon lose their muscle tone and mobility. Exercise is particularly important for everyone. One thing about people is that they are constantly changing. Kids have different exercise habits in summer than in winter. Studious, sports averse kids have, or should have physical activity as a part of their daily routine. Those with a daily grind or a long commute have a particularly difficult time fitting in the necessary 20 minutes of coronary-vascular (or CV) fitness regimen three times a week. Some choose to exercise alone; some exercise in groups or on teams. But count on it: proper diet and reasonable exercise will save years of discomfort and pain later in a life that has been extended, for most of us, well into the 80s.

For this reason, I'm telling you about two newly available programs for different segments of our population which are particularly susceptible to the threat of insufficient exercise. There are many who for whatever reason, need a stimulant to support their fitness with a discipline which may not always be pleasurable so both of these programs call for a fee with the expectation that if you've paid for them you'll use them.

Fitness trainers

For those younger participants who are developing habit patterns which will help them include enough CV activity to ensure good health without the need for strenuous sporting activity, fitness trainers replace "exercise as a necessity" in modern society. Modern communities make walking difficult. High rise buildings make stairs impractical. Who shovels snow?

Good individual and group fitness trainers tailor exercise regimens, making them comfortable, novel, and fun. Moreover, they can frequently be arranged for groups, making them inexpensive and companionable. For example, in Cohasset, Paul Tise of Hypertone on 3A, phone 781 383-8004, near the Consignment Shop, has a five-week session on Mondays and Wednesdays for boys and girls who may not wish to participate in a sports program. On May 1 he will be starting a Saturday program for kids who may not have fitness included in their summer plans. These two popular programs have to be fun; otherwise the kids wouldn't like them. Programs can be developed to fit many other situations.

But count on it: proper diet and reasonable exercise will save years of discomfort and pain later in a life that has been extended, for most of us, well into the 80s.

For adults above 55, the Cohasset Counsel for Elder Affairs has a full range of programs designed to promote healthy activity for seniors. Qualifying for participation in its programs may be the easiest thing you're likely to do - you just have to get older. One new program features Karen Kirkendall, who has agreed to restart her popular aerobics class at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St.

This program features senior aerobics from 7:30-8:15 a.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Karen says: "Get fit while having fun" is the class motto. Start moving to some Motown classics like 'This Old Heart of Mine, Been Broke a Thousand Times". You can even sing along! This 45-minute class features 20 minutes of dance/aerobics, 15 minutes of upper body work with light weights, and 10 minutes of stretching and cool down. The cost is $3 per class, and you're guaranteed to get your money's worth! The only requirements are comfortable workout clothes, aerobic or gym shoes, and a good attitude. The class will be begin the Wednesday after Easter, April 14.

Karen began the senior aerobics classes back in the 80s. Even though she moved away in 1994, the class continued with other great instructors. Now that Karen is back in the area, she's delighted to continue where she left off — having a great time with a motivated and fun group. All men and women, 50-plus, interested in getting fit and staying healthy in a noncompetitive, supportive environment, should join.

When asked about her background, Karen says: "I have always loved to dance and perform since I was a skinny kid in Texas, but my love for teaching aerobics came from my experiences as a twirler/majorette. (It's almost impossible to find a Texas gal who wasn't a majorette!) I was a majorette in junior high, high school, and college, teaching twirling and drill team during the summers of my college years. The aerobic instruction I received in the early 80s was very similar to drill team steps I had performed in the 60s. I decided as a young adult that I wanted to be physically fit and that participating in dance aerobics would be a fun way to stay physically fit. I taught dance aerobics, step aerobics, and senior aerobics from 1984-1996. My desire to be physically fit is as strong as ever, and I'm delighted to be back "in front of the class", hopefully motivating others to get with the fitness program."

I encourage you to join this class at the Community Center. Soon, perhaps you may be able to twirl a baton and lead a band. Call the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs for more information, 781 383 9112.

Those d– – – hospital beds

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Remember, when I am rich and famous, that you heard it here first.

I'm about to launch a new and lucrative career.

I'm going to become an inventor.

And the first thing I'm going to invent is a comfortable hospital bed.

Is that cheering I hear coming from the vox populi?

If George XLIII is still on the lookout for weapons of mass destruction, I can direct him to the nearest medical chop-shop.

Every room that has sleep-over facilities contains a weapon of (insert here a word the rhymes with "mass") destruction.

I defy anyone to tell me that he or she has ever been comfortable in a hospital bed except under the influence of an anesthetic.

Somehow, the manufacturers of said beds have managed to slip an unidentified protruding object into the mattress directly below the tailbone of the hapless patient.

It's like the princess and the pea only this pea is roughly the size of a baseball.

I defy anyone to tell me that he or she has ever been comfortable in a hospital bed except under the influence of an anesthetic.

And don't look for it. It can't be seen, only felt.

The routine goes like this:

You have just returned to your room from whatever tortures the doctors and nurses have put you through. You lie down in the bed. It feels so good, so comfortable after the strenuous exercises you've been through, like walking.

About 10 minutes later, you are aware that some Thing is poking you in the lower back just north of the place where they say the sun doesn't shine.

No matter. You just raise the head of the bed and slide your body down toward the foot. Ah, comfort again. For about 10 minutes. The Thing is back.

You lower the head of the bed and raise the foot. You can relax. For about five minutes. Then . . . The Thing again.

You flatten out the bed and roll to the side so that you're resting on your hip. But you can't roll far enough because of the bars that are put on the side of the bed to prevent you from escaping. The only thing to do is hold on to the bar to keep yourself from rolling back. But you can only do that for as long as your strength holds out.

By this time, you find yourself so badly tangled up in the sheets and blankets that you can't move and the only thing to do is ring for a nurse to straighten out the mess you've made.

You ask her if she will take down the bars and let you sit on the bed and dangle your feet over the side, thus shifting your weight from the tailbone. She has to hash that over with the other nurses. The verdict: No way. You might fall off the bed.

She does, however, fix you up with a pillow which, strategically placed, offers some comfort for maybe 15 minutes before . . . there it is again

. . The Thing.

By this time, you're so worn out from wriggling around in search of comfort that you fall asleep in spite of it all.

Whereupon, the nurse awakens you to give you your sleeping pill.

Williams grateful for election support

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to express my thanks and gratitude to the citizens of Cohasset for their support throughout this entire campaign and election process. I am so proud and excited to be representing our community as a new member of the Cohasset School Committee.

These past three months have been filled with new challenges, new ideas and wonderful opportunities to meet many new people. Thank you to those of you who actively worked on my campaign and also to those who took time to meet me at a coffee, a reception or one of the candidate's forums. Your support has been overwhelming.

I intend to demonstrate my gratitude by bringing new and creative ideas to build a solid plan for the future of our schools. I look forward to working to prioritize the superior education all of our children deserve.

Rotary helps eradicate polio

TO THE EDITOR:

In communities like Cohasset, there is no organization that takes the motto of 'service above self' more seriously and passionately than Rotary International. Nowhere is this more evident than in Rotary's commitment to a polio-free world.

In 1985, Rotary International took a stand against polio, a disease that crippled 350,000 children annually. Eighteen years later, Rotary has become the heart and soul of the Global Polio Eradication Initiative, a partnership spearheaded by the World Health Organization, Rotary International, US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), dedicated to realizing Rotary's dream: a polio-free world for children everywhere.

Rotary International's total contribution to polio eradication currently stands at more than half a billion dollars.

Today 209 countries are polio-free (with only seven more to go) and more than 2 billion children have been immunized. Because of the dedication of Rotary members everywhere, and the support of communities like Cohasset we are one step away from a polio-free world.

On behalf of the Global Polio Eradication partnership, we commend the Rotary Club of Cohasset and the people of Cohasset for your latest and much needed contribution to ensure every child is immunized against polio.

Political health note

TO THE EDITOR:

Is there something in our drinking water? Is it safe to drink straight? There must be some explanation for normally rational citizens recirculating (with passionate conviction) the mantra that our several overrides prove that we are mismanaged, costs out of control, and we urgently need to replace the ship's crew.

Of course costs and taxes have escalated alarmingly, because of the rising costs of just about everything in the universe, because of the mandated requirements, because of union and civil service strictures, because of drastic reduction in state aid, and because we lack an industrial or significant commercial tax base. Our current crew should have been appreciated, rather than vilified, for their masterful job of keeping the ship on course, while dealing also with the boundless desire for quality services as expressed by the voters at town meetings.

The overrides are a responsible way to deal with the unfortunate facts of life, and are not a symptom of failed leadership (as opportunist office seekers imply, to the huzzas of those who should know better).

Is the town badly managed? Of course not; despite the far greater complexities, the town is better managed than at any time in recent history.

Some of the woefully uninformed campaign rhetoric has been aptly described as "dropping bombs from 30,000 feet". Sadly, part of the collateral damage was the defeat of one of our best-ever selectmen, Merle Brown. He may not run slick campaigns, but he understands the town and its needs, and has served it conscientiously for four terms as selectman and for numerous years in other capacities. Let us fervently hope for a comeback!

So, as a Health Note to restore sanity in the Town, and to encourage redirection of cynicism to the appropriate targets, in the days and weeks before next Town Meeting and before election, I say "Go easy on the water, or whatever it is"!

No simple solution to back problems

TO THE EDITOR:

In Steve Bobo's article he recommended treating your back pain with exercises. This advice is an over simplification of a complex problem. Back pain is a symptom of a problem as he stated, mechanical problems with the spine can sometimes cause pain and sometimes not. Pain can be the end result of a back problem. When the pain arrives there has to be damage to tissues that is on a grand enough scale to elicit pain within the nervous system. Pain can also be elusive.

Exercising your back when it is in pain will only cause your body to compensate more and worsen the mechanical malfunction within your spine. When the pain subsides or disappears that is not an indication that your back is healthy. Your body has the ability to produce its own pain killing chemicals and can raise its sensitivity to feel pain. If the removal of pain was the benchmark of health then

Gay marriage compromise in sync with public opinion

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Beacon Hill finally turned a corner in the gay marriage debate last week, with adoption of a compromise that a majority disliked even as they voted "yes." By the time the final vote – 105-92 – approving the Constitutional amendment was taken on Monday, it was clear that this was one of the strangest majorities ever assembled beneath the Golden Dome. That majority was only possible because there were not enough supporters of gay marriage in the Legislature, and there were enough gay marriage opponents willing to elevate gay couples to a legal status undreamed-of 10 years ago, via civil unions. By the end of the voting Monday, here was the position of most gay-rights groups and lobbyists:

• We hope to get a "no" on this.

• If we can't get a "no" on this, let's get a "yes" on something a majority of the public doesn't like.

The first scenario didn't come true, though gay rights forces said afterwards they'd come closer than they ever hoped. As to the second possibility, it will be tested in November 2006 — if the Legislature of 2005/06 approves the same language adopted last week. With elections in November, that's a big if.

Advocates for gay marriage hope to win a lot of votes from gay marriage opponents in 2006, if it comes to that. They are hoping people who really don't want gays and lesbians to have any standing will reject a gay marriage ban if it means acceptance of strong civil unions.

On the other side, a number of lawmakers made clear they'd never in a million years vote for strong civil unions — except that they were doing so, to accomplish their goal of banning gay marriage and putting that question before the public. After several hours of parliamentary challenges and debate, that was the only option left to gay marriage foes — vote against a gay marriage ban, or vote for civil unions.

Those on the extremes didn't like it, but it turns out that what was finally adopted was in sync with the Massachusetts public, at least as divined by public opinion surveys. Citizens polled say they oppose gay marriage but support civil unions, and that's just what the state Constitution will call for if the amendment adopted is at last approved. But that's a long way off; Gov. Romney is still looking at the legal options for blocking the issuance of marriage licenses May 17. Attorney General Reilly said all the judicial issues have been addressed and he won't ask for an extended stay of the court order mandating such licenses. So for now, the next stage of this story would appear to be the weddings.

Those on the extremes didn't like it, but it turns out that what was finally adopted was in sync with the Massachusetts public, at least as divined by public opinion surveys.

With passage of the gay-marriage item, attention at last turned to more routine items on the Hill, if there's really such a thing:

• Time running out on redistricting rewrite — The most important thing that didn't happen last week was easy to identify: the House didn't pass a new version of representative district maps for Suffolk County. A new plan that plaintiffs didn't especially like was brought forth two weeks ago, as leadership tries to address a federal judicial panel's finding that the districts approved last year discriminate against minority voters. House lawyers plan to present the three-judge panel with a final proposal this week. If the judges don't like the new map, they may draft the fall election districts themselves.

• Convention will halt trains and traffic; full value questioned — State officials had hoped North Station could be kept open during the July 26-29 Democratic National Convention, but the Madrid train bombings rendered that scenario out of the question, officials said. State Police and Secret Service officials said I-93 must be shut down all four evenings of the convention to prevent the use of truck bombs on a highway that comes within 40 feet of the FleetCenter. Meanwhile, the Beacon Hill Institute, a conservative think tank at Suffolk University, released a projection of the convention's economic benefit over the four days, and came up with a figure $28 million less than what the Democrats' convention committee has estimated. Using computer modeling, the Beacon Hill Institute pegged the extra economic activity at $122 million, but said it didn't account for negative consequences of congestion. The DNCC stuck with its $150 million figure.

• Romney, mayor meet and mend on convention — The story was fun while it lasted: Gov. Romney suggested the FleetCenter ought to be scrapped as a convention venue in favor of the new Boston Convention Center. The idea touched off a squall of resentment when the Republican mischievously floated it. After Democrats shrugged off the governor's idea, Romney got more cooperative, meeting face-to-face with Boston Mayor Thomas Menino and vowing state government will do all it can to promote a lucrative and safe convention — at the FleetCenter.

• Longtime trial court chief will leave June 20 — Samuel Zoll, who's headed the District Court department of the Trial Court for 28 years, confirmed he's retiring on June 20. Chief Administrative Judge Robert Mulligan is expected to name Zoll's successor soon.

• Deputy Ed commissioner to depart for civic sector — Mark McQuillan, who led the education department through Commissioner David Driscoll's heart attack last fall and who's played a key role in the ed-reform wars, announced he'll depart state service June 12. McQuillan is joining Edco, a consortium of suburban school districts.

• Zapp bill heads to romney's desk — Legislation was enacted expanding the list of crimes for which offenders can be held in secure facilities past the end of their criminal sentences. Passage was a victory for the family of Alexandra Zapp, whose 2000 murder at the hands of a sex offender might have been prevented had he still been "civilly committed." Judges will determine, following hearings, whether criminals who have served their sentences are too dangerous to be released.

BAN SAME-SEX MARRIAGES/ESTABLISH CIVIL UNIONS (H 3190)

Constitutional Convention 116-81, 111-86 and 105-92, approved the proposed Travaglini-Lees constitutional amendment sponsored by Senate President Robert Travaglini (D-Boston) and Senate Minority Leader Brian Lees (R-East Longmeadow). The amendment bans same-sex marriage, gives same-sex couples the right to form civil unions with all the same benefits, protections, rights and responsibilities granted to couples who are married and recognizes that under present federal law same-sex persons in civil unions would be denied federal benefits available to married persons. It also allows the Legislature to enact laws that are not inconsistent with the amendment in order to carry out the purpose of the amendment.

The measure's next stop is the 2005-2006 session where it can no longer be amended and can simply be voted up or down on one roll call vote.

Immediately following the session, Gov. Mitt Romney announced that he would ask the Supreme Judicial Court to stay its November ruling, allowing gay marriages to begin on May 17, until the final outcome of the constitutional amendment process. That process could end sometime in 2005 or 2006 if the 2005-2006 legislature defeats the amendment or in November 2006 if that legislature approves the proposal and it goes on the 2006 ballot. In the meantime, Attorney General Tom Reilly, the state official who would formally ask for the stay, quickly announced that he does not intend to seek the delay requested by the governor.

The three roll calls in this week's report were all on the identical Travaglini-Lees amendment but many legislators with various agendas did not vote the same way on all three. Representatives and senators on various sides of the gay marriage issue switched their votes for strategic reasons on some of the roll call votes.

Most supporters of same-sex marriage implemented the same parliamentary strategy that they used during the March 11 convention in order to attempt to put an end to the convention's action on all amendments banning gay marriage. They oppose the amendment but voted for it on the first two roll calls and then voted against it on the third roll call in order to defeat it. Under convention rules, the defeat of the amendment on the third roll call would have resulted in a ban on any additional anti-gay marriage amendments being allowed for consideration this year. If they had voted against the amendment on either of the first two roll calls, the amendment likely would have been defeated and under the rules, the convention would then be open to other harsher anti-gay marriage amendments including one that would have placed two separate questions on the ballot—one banning gay marriages and another allowing civil unions for same-sex couples. They also knew that that even if their strategy failed, the Travaglini-Lees amendment is the lesser of several evils and that they still have an opportunity to defeat the proposal at the 2005-2006 convention or on the 2006 ballot. Other gay marriage supporters indicated that they understood the strategy but voted against the proposal on all three roll calls because they could not in good conscience ever be on record as having voted to place discrimination into the constitution.

Most opponents of gay marriage implemented the same counter-strategy that they used at the March 11 convention. They voted against the Travaglini-Lees amendment on the first two roll call votes because even though they favor the language banning gay marriages, most are opposed to the language constitutionally legalizing civil unions. Defeat of the amendment on either of these first two roll calls would have opened up the floor to other anti-gay marriage amendments that they support. However, once the amendment was approved on the first two roll calls, if a sufficient number of gay marriage opponents voted against the amendment on the third roll call, the strategy of same-sex marriage supporters would have worked. The amendment would have been defeated and the convention would be barred from considering any other anti-gay marriage amendments this year. Fearful of this outcome, most gay marriage opponents voted for the amendment on the third roll call in order to ensure that at least some anti-gay marriage proposal has a chance to be placed on the 2006 ballot. Other gay marriage opponents said that they understood the strategy but voted against the amendment on all three roll calls because they could not in good conscience support a proposal that guarantees civil unions in the constitution. They argued that the amendment would be a confusing and misleading ballot question that would blackmail anti-gay marriage voters into supporting civil unions at the same time or rejecting the entire amendment.

Here's a look at a breakdown of the three basic voting blocks on the roll call votes on the Travaglini-Lees amendment. Most legislators fall into one of these blocks.

Block 1: These legislators, led by Travaglini and Lees, believe that the amendment is a fair and reasonable compromise that protects the traditional institution of marriage while ensuring that gay and lesbians have the constitutional right to form civil unions and be afforded all the protections of married couples. This group also includes legislators who are not big fans of the amendment but are determined to give voters a say by placing a question on the 2006 ballot. This group of legislators generally voted "yes" on all three roll call votes.

Block 2: These legislators either strongly support same-sex marriage and/or oppose placing a ban on gay marriage in the constitution. The voting pattern of this block broke down into two groups. The first group simply voted "no" on all three roll call votes. The second group participated in the strategy to vote "yes" on the first two roll calls and then to switch their votes to "no" on the final vote in their unsuccessful attempt to defeat the proposal and bar consideration of any more anti-gay marriage amendments this year.

Block 3: These legislators support banning same-sex marriages but do not favor civil unions or prefer to craft civil union legislation as a general law rather than as part of the constitution. The voting pattern of this block broke down into two groups. The first group simply voted "no" on all three roll call votes. The second group participated in the strategy to vote "no" on the first two roll calls and then to switch their votes to "yes" on the final vote in their successful attempt to keep at least some anti-gay marriage proposal alive and place it on the 2006 ballot.

(On all three roll calls, a "Yea" vote is for the proposed constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriages but giving same-sex couples the right to form civil unions with all the same benefits, protections, rights and responsibilities granted to couples who are married. A "Nay" vote is against the proposal).

The exact language of the Travaglini-Lees amendment reads:

"The unified purpose of this article is both to define the institution of civil marriage and to establish civil unions to provide same-sex persons with entirely the same benefits, protections, rights, privileges and obligations as are afforded to married persons, while recognizing that under present federal law same-sex persons in civil unions will be denied federal benefits available to married persons.

It being the public policy of this commonwealth to protect the unique relationship of marriage, only the union of one man and one woman shall be valid or recognized as a marriage in the commonwealth. Two persons of the same sex shall have the right to form a civil union if they otherwise meet the requirements set forth by law for marriage. Civil unions for same sex persons are established by this article and shall provide entirely the same benefits, protections, rights, privileges and obligations that are afforded to persons married under the law of the commonwealth. All laws applicable to marriage shall also apply to civil unions.

This article is self-executing, but the General Court may enact laws not inconsistent with anything herein contained to carry out the purpose of this article."

AMENDMENT PROPERLY BEFORE CONVENTION (H 3190)

Constitutional Convention 143-48, upheld the ruling of Senate President Robert Travaglini (D-Boston) that a new version of a proposed amendment banning gay marriages but authorizing civil unions for same-sex couples was properly before the convention. The ruling had been challenged primarily by anti-gay marriage legislators who said that this amendment and the similar Travaglini-Lees amendment were offered improperly and violated the rules of the convention. These opponents of the ruling argued that at the prior convention on March 11, the convention clerk accepted a copy of these two amendments prior to the specific time that Travaglini had announced that amendments would be accepted. They argued that this action resulted in these two amendments being considered ahead of all others because convention rules dictate that amendments are debated in the order in which they are received. They noted that under complicated convention rules, any amendment considered ahead of others has an advantage because if it is ultimately approved, all others are tossed aside and cannot be considered. They said that this is unfair to sponsors of other amendments including the one that split the same-sex marriage ban and the creation of civil unions into two separate ballot questions. Supporters of Travaglini's ruling said the clerk acted appropriately in accepting all the amendments in an orderly fashion despite much chaos and jockeying for position at the rostrum. They noted that opponents of the ruling are simply upset because they do not favor the amendments and want their own amendments to be considered first. They also argued that overturning Travaglini's ruling would create chaos and a terrible precedent for future conventions. The fact that these two amendments were accepted first turned out to be a very important action. The Travaglini-Lees amendment was eventually approved by the convention and all other amendments were barred from being considered. (A "Yea" vote is for Travaglini's ruling that the amendment was properly before the convention. A "Nay" vote is against the ruling).

REQUIRE SENATE APPROVAL OF JUDGES' NOMINATIONS (S 362)

Constitutional Convention 166-28, recommitted to a special committee a proposed constitutional amendment giving the Senate the power to confirm or reject the governor's appointment of judges. In order to reach the Senate, the nomination would also first have to be approved by the Legislature's Judiciary Committee. Current law requires the nominations to be approved by the Governor's Council. This proposed amendment, approved on a voice vote without a roll call, replaced an original amendment that would have allowed judges to be appointed to six-year terms and then have their names placed on the ballot every six years. Voters would then decide whether a judge should be removed from the bench or be eligible for reappointment to another six-tear term. Recommitment supporters said that any major changes in the procedure for the appointment of judges is a serious matter and should be studied and reviewed. They noted that many members are upset with the pro-gay marriage ruling of the judges on the Supreme Judicial Court and urged the Senate to delay action until some time has passed and senators can reflect upon the magnitude of this proposed change in the confirmation process of judges. Recommitment opponents said the proposal should remain on the floor to be voted up or down on its merits by the full Senate. Some of these opponents said they would vote against the proposal because they feel that requiring Senate confirmation of judges would interject politics into the process. Others indicated they would listen to the debate prior to making up their minds. (A "Yea" vote is for recommitment of the proposal that requires Senate approval of judicial nominations. A "Nay" vote is against recommitment).

people who feel great could never have heart attacks or strokes and we know this happens all the time.

The nerves of your back are the power supply to the back muscles. These nerves emanate from your spine. If you have a mechanical problem within your spine these spinal nerves can short circuit and decrease the power supply to your back muscles leading to eventual strain and sometimes pain. Exercising these back muscles when they have lost power is absolutely wrong.

What should you do? Well first of all as you would have your teeth checked on a regular basis so should you go to a chiropractor to have your spine checked. If you have back pain go to the chiropractor and see if the cause is mechanical in nature, which it usually is, and through chiropractic adjustments the mechanical cause is corrected. Once the cause is corrected then exercises to help keep it stable and strong will help.

Bradley stance on same-sex marriage not sum of career

TO THE EDITOR:

With respect to the recent same sex marriage debate and Rep. Garrett Bradley (Gays upset with Garrett Bradley, March 11), I do not think we can characterize this issue as Democrat vs. Republican, nor do I think we should view Garrett's position on this issue as the sum of his political career.

Since his election to the General Court, Garrett Bradley has fought hard for this district and the town of Cohasset. He has supported and helped pass home rule petitions and mitigation regarding the MBTA Ride program. He has led on issues such as 40b reform and for faster reimbursements from the Commonwealth's school building assistance program. He has taken a fiscally responsibile approach on behalf of his constituents by voting against tax increases in last session's billion dollar tax package. And, most notably, he has put aside partisan differences to work successfully with Senator Robert Hedlund on many common issues such as jet pollution on the South Shore.

The issue of same sex marriage transcends political ideology. We have seen this unique dynamic emerge throughout the course of the debate both locally and nationally. In fact, one of the most moving speeches in favor of same sex marriage came from the Commonwealth's longest serving Republican representative, Shaun Kelly of Dalton, when he asked his fellow legislators to think of Rep. Liz Malia of Jamaica Plain, who is openly gay, during their debate. "If you believe that the love Liz has is less than the love you have . . . yourself, I would suggest you are wrong. This is what this is about, the judgment of love," said Kelly.

I have spoken with Garrett about this issue many times. The bottom line is that we disagree on the process. He believes the voters will ultimately see some form of ballot initiative on the matter regardless of what the legislature does. Therefore, it is better to frame the ballot question through the Constitutional Convention (which must be ratified by voters in 2006), rather than allow the hardcore opponents of same sex marriage to do so by submitting their own ballot initiative. The point being that the later would omit the fallback position of civil unions in their ballot language, thereby eliminating any potential for compromise if they prevail.

I am a supporter of the Goodridge decision and think that the legislature should have deferred to the Supreme Judicial Court by letting the ruling stand. To me, this is an issue of equality and I do not believe that if John Adams were alive today, he would approve of any form of discrimination being written into the world's oldest constitution, especially one that he authored!

Wherever you come down on this issue, we should respect the process and never forget that there are fundamentally good people on all sides of the debate. In that spirit, I urge the citizens of this district to not judge Garrett's entire legislative record through a myopic lens that focuses solely on this one position. He deserves and has earned far more consideration from all of us.

Rotary appreciates roadrace support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Rotary Club of Cohasset would like to thank all the wonderful volunteers and the citizens of Cohasset for helping the Cohasset Road Race by the Sea, held this past Sunday, be such a success in its 28th year.

We had over 870 runners registered for the 10K race and a number of walkers for both the 5K &10K walk in the morning. The effort by all involved was very helpful and gratifying to the Rotary Club members who work so hard on this project to help raise funds for the many charities and organizations that receive support from Rotary International and the Cohasset Rotary Club. Over and over we heard from the runners how beautiful and scenic the racecourse was, how cooperative everyone seemed to be, putting up with the traffic disruption for safety of the race, and cheering on the runners as they passed. We would also like to thank the businesses and organizations that helped support the race (too numerous to list here, but you will see many listed on the back of the race T-shirts and in the Rotary Phone book due out later this spring).

The main objective of Rotary is service — in the community, in the workplace, and throughout the world. Rotary volunteers build goodwill and peace, provide humanitarian service, and encourage high ethical standards in all vocations. The Rotary motto is "Service Above Self". Rotary clubs are non-religious, non-governmental, and open to every race, culture, and creed. Members represent a cross section of local business and professional leaders. The Cohasset Rotary Club meets on Monday evenings at the Light keepers Residence.

Slides and lecture on Minot's Light

The Cohasset Historical Society spring lecture series continues the third Wednesday of April and May at the Historical Society headquarters in the Pratt Building, 100 South Main St.

The April 21 program will feature David Wadsworth's slides and lecture on "Minot's Light: One Hundred and Forty-Four Years of Service." Wadsworth calls on his vast knowledge of local history to recount the story of this 114-foot granite tower, which is often shrouded in salt spray, fog and mystery.

Leslie Silvia will discuss her mother's book, "Once Upon an Island" by Matilda Silvia, at the May 19 meeting. Peddocks Island, a 188-acre bit of land on the outskirts of Boston Harbor, was home to Matilda Silvia's family from 1904 to 2001. Her memoir of life on the island is rich in both local and family history.

All presentations will begin at 7:30. These lectures are open to the public and are free of charge. Light refreshment will be served and all are invited to attend.

Peace forum spreads its anti-war message

Continues to conduct a vigil every Tuesday

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

"Give peace a chance" continues to be the message of South Shore peace activists.

The South Shore Peace Forum held a vigil March 20 at the Hingham Rotary, coinciding with national demonstrations in New York and other cities on the one-year anniversary of the United States attack on Iraq.

This week also marks the second anniversary of the South Shore Peace Forum's Tuesday vigil from 11:30 a.m. to noon at Hingham Post Office.

"Standing up for peace — in weekly vigils and in observance of the first year of the war in Iraq — should be easy, almost a given," said Forum member Catha McSweeney. "But oddly, and sadly, it brings out anger and hate in some who apparently equate invasion, death, and destruction of others' countries as righteous and patriotic."

McSweeney was among the peace activists at Saturday's vigil.

"In its three-year history, the current administration has engineered three invasions — counting Haiti — swept aside opposing views at home and abroad, ignored evidence that doesn't fit its preconceived goals, produced a record federal deficit, and much more," she said. "I feel, simply, that there are better paths to follow."

The Forum was formed in the early 1990s when talk about a possible Gulf War broke out. The group was active throughout the conflict, hosting forums and vigils. The Forum was reactivated briefly in the late 1990s when the United States threatened to bomb Iraq and again as a means of praying for United States soldiers and Afghan citizens killed in Afghanistan.

"Two years ago we hoped for a non-violent solution to the Iraq crisis," said Shirley Brown, a Forum co-founder. "We believed in peaceful negotiations and had faith in the United Nation's approach to the threats Iraq posed. This is not to say we approved of Saddam Hussein or his acts of terror. Today, with our economy in a sorry state, drastic cuts in education and health care, people without jobs, ourselves and future generations saddled with paying for this unnecessary war, and people on both sides being wounded or killed, we are more than ever committed to our belief in a power that is greater than violence."

Each week at noon the bell at Old Ship Church tolls in remembrance of the many United States troops and Iraqi civilians who have been killed or wounded.

Catha McSweeney, left, waves to cars as they pass by the Hingham Rotary, on the anniversary of the US invasion of Iraq last month. The South Shore Peace Forum, which continues to conduct weekly peace vigils in Hingham, organized the event.

Over the past two years, the group has sponsored a number of events, including a large informal discussion with Congressman William Delahunt on peace, security, and civil liberties and a forum on the implications of the Patriot Act at Hingham Public Library. Those events allowed for free discussion of ideas, providing an opportunity for those of differing opinions to exchange views.

The Rev. John Beuhrens, former president of the Unitarian Universalist Association, also spoke upon his return from an interfaith Christmas visit to Iraq. In addition, the Forum showed two films, one about the domestic impact of the Administration's handling of the Iraq crisis and the other about a family struggling with loss as a result of the attack on the World Trade Towers.

For the second year in a row, the Forum welcomed and fed Buddhist monks as they passed through Hingham on their walk across Massachusetts. This year's event is called "Walk for a New Spring." The monks hope to meet with mayors to share information about an international initiative called "Mayors for Peace," started by Mayor Akiba of Hiroshima calling for the abolition of all nuclear weapons.

Plans are underway for a forum this month focusing on veteran concerns — issues they face in Iraq and others they are facing upon their return from Afghanistan and Iraq.

"We invite people to join our vigil as we continue to witness for peace on Tuesday mornings," Brown said.

CHS seniors are playing the college waiting game

Is stressful time for local teens

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It's that time of year again when high school seniors make the daily frantic rush to the mailbox in search of college acceptance letters. In a town like Cohasset, where roughly 90 percent of seniors go on to a four-year college, there are a lot of students who have licked the stamps, put the applications in the mail and now, have nothing left to do but wait.

"A good number of our kids are stressed out right now," said high school guidance counselor Ed Leonard, adding with the growing trend to apply to school early, many students have heard back from colleges. However, early admission usually requires sending in applications in November or December, and it can be very stressful for students to not hear anything from a school until April. That, coupled with the increased number of students being put on wait-lists instead of being given a firm decision by a school, adds to the stress even further.

Leonard said in the past, students would typically apply to around four schools. Now that the Internet makes the application process much easier, as many schools accept standard blanket applications with the same essay question, students everywhere are applying to 10 schools on average. "They're nervous they're not going to find a place to go," said Leonard, adding because the amount of students going on to college has increased, as well as the number of applications each individual school receives, competition has become fierce.

"A good number of our kids are stressed out right now."
— Ed Leonard, guidance counselor

Leonard said he has called admissions offices to ask about particular a student and is generally told the student is a good candidate for being accepted into the school, but with so many applications, the school would rather wait and see what else comes in before making a decision. However, Leonard said because the national reply date for schools is May 1, and all deposits must be in at that time to secure a place in the class, every student will have a definite answer from all schools they were wait-listed for by mid-May. However, that exceeds the comfort level of many in Cohasset, as graduation is held June 5.

Essay writing

Because Cohasset sends so many students on to pursue their education, it has become primarily a college-prep school. Senior year is filled with that preparation and there is even time set aside for teaching college essay writing in English class.

"Kids talk about it a lot," Leonard said of the college acceptance process, and the talk is not limited to seniors. For the past few years, a "Wall of No Shame" has been started where students post their responses from colleges — wait-list replies are posted sideways and rejections are posted upside down, while acceptances are right side up — and it has drawn the attention of the younger students, which is a good thing. The earlier students begin thinking about what kinds of colleges they might like to attend the better, Leonard said.

Leonard recommends students, even as early as sophomore year, "Start a little hobby of visiting places." If ever in Boston, students can visit Northeastern University on Huntington Avenue and see if they could picture themselves going to a large school, taking the train instead of driving a car, and living life in the city. If a student goes skiing on vacation, that could provide the perfect opportunity to visit schools up north like St. Michael's College. "Colleges don't mind if you stop in and ask for a tour," Leonard said, adding sometimes it's even better to go exploring on your own. Finding out what the campus is like and what the people are like will allow students to determine whether they will feel comfortable attending the college.

In addition, underclassmen and their parents can benefit from attending a forum with panels of administrators from various colleges, hosted by the Social Service League. Representatives from an array of schools, which over the years have consisted of Massasoit Community College, Boston College, and Babson College give students the opportunity to ask questions about a wide variety of schools.

Leonard said while it's easy to tell students things will work out in the end, that doesn't necessarily take away the stress they feel, or ease the tough decision of which school is right for them. Leonard said one of the most important things a student can do when choosing a college is to revisit the campus. Because a first visit usually helps students decide whether they want to apply to attend, it is a very different experience than knowing they have been accepted and the school is a viable option. "Ask questions, ask the kids on campus, if you think you know what department you'd like to be on, ask them questions," said Leonard, which will hopefully help make the right decision.

"Most kids do end up in a place where they're happy," said Leonard, although college can be an adjustment at first. Typically, problems with a roommate or missing friends and family cause the most uneasiness. However, after the first month or so, Leonard said students tend to settle into their new surroundings. In those instances where a student decides transferring is the best choice, Leonard said that can be a positive experience as well. Sometimes, "If you do a good job freshman year, you'll have a better chance to get into your top choice school as a sophomore," he said.

Above all, Leonard said it is important for adults to remember that going off to college is a life changing experience. The more information students have, the better equipped they will be to make their decision, and the happier they will be with their choice. "It's a difficult time," Leonard said. "Whatever reassurance adults can give them is a good thing."

Rec. summer positions

Candidates, 18 years and over interested in working with children in the Cohasset Recreation Commission's summer, 7 week playground program for children 3 /12 to 12 years may call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109 for employment application forms.

Positions exist in the 3-1/2 to 5 year old, half day, (9 a.m. to noon,) program and the full-day, (9 a.m. to 3 p.m.), program. Candidates should have demonstrated experience working with the children in groups/day camp settings.

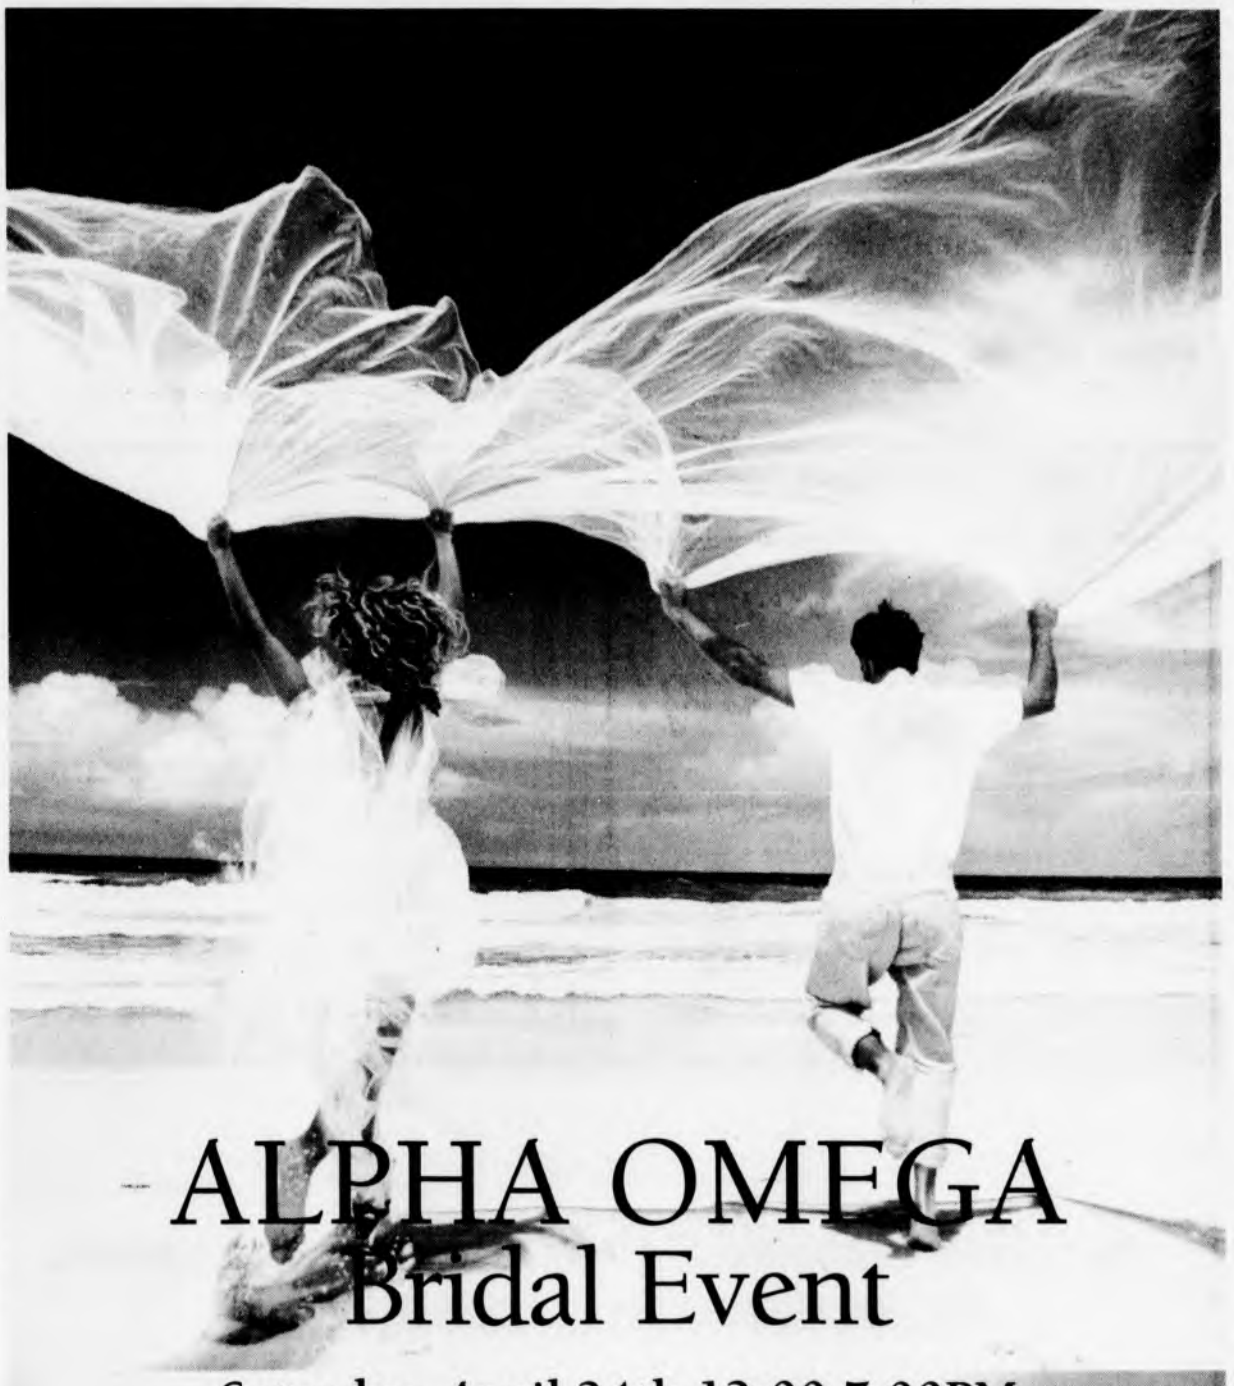
Also, the Recreation Department is accepting applications for a youth tennis instructor. Youth tennis lessons are a 7 week program meeting hourly between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m., Monday through Thursday, June 28 through Aug. 12.

Call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109 for more information and application forms.

Dog obedience classes to start

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer dog obedience classes taught by Happy-Dog Training School.

Classes will be held on Monday evenings, on the Town Common, Cohasset, starting Monday, April 26, for Beginner classes at 6 p.m. and at 7 p.m. for Advanced. For all classes the fee is $100 for the five classes, one hour per week program. Dog owners are required to have their dogs' shots/inoculations up to date.



To register, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first call, first enrolled basis.

CHS lady laxers drop last second thriller in Sandwich, 7-6

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It was one of those games in which you got that sense pretty quickly the team with the last shot would win.

Unfortunately, Sandwich got that last shot, and the members of the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team were left to wrestle with thoughts of what could have been on the long bus ride home from the Cape. Even more unfortunately, it was the only sporting event involving a CHS team over the past week that wasn't postponed, so it gets all the press.

"It was a tough one to lose, but the girls played well," said third year CHS coach Torin Sweeney, following the 7-6 season opening setback last Tuesday. "It was just one of those things."

What could have been would have been if the game had ended a mere 100 seconds sooner. With 1:40 to play, Cohasset junior Lauren Rizzoti scored to break a 5-5 tie, scooping up the rebound of an Ashley Faber shot near the top of the crease and beating the Sandwich goalie with a pretty high release that found twine just under the cross bar.

The Lady Skippers won the ensuing draw, but then got the ball slapped away and a Sandwich player wound up scooping it up and starting a rush that ended with Cohasset goalie Joanna Hamilton being beaten for the sixth time on the afternoon, this with 11:20 showing on the game clock.

The tie was broken 30 seconds later. After the hosts won the face-off, some good passing found an open cutter for a quick one-timer past the helpless Hamilton, making it a 7-6 game.

Cohasset won the ensuing draw and had some chances in the waning seconds, but they could not answer the host's late heroics.

"I thought Joanna played great," said coach Sweeney, making it clear he was absolving his sophomore netminder from

Race-by-the-Sea draws near record field

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Better than anticipated weather helped pull out one of the largest runner totals in recent years to Sunday's 28th annual Cohasset Roadrace-by-the-Sea.

A total of 870 runners registered for the race, with 671 finishing the challenging and picturesque 10K course that winds . and first year organizer Brad Goodwin figures that count might have reached four figures had the weather been as nice elsewhere in the Greater as it turned out to be in Cohasset by the 1 p.m. start.

"Unfortunately, from what I understand, the weather was not as nice in the Boston area and in other areas as it was around here," said Goodwin. "We actually had a pretty good number of pre-registered runners not show up, which is a shame, because it turned out to be a near perfect day for running."

This assertion was ably supported by the top notch times turned in.

The winning time of 32:57 posted by Josh Shon, of Cambridge, was nearly 1:30 better than last year's best time of 34:24 run by Brookline's Kip Wells. Shon, part of a large contingent from the Boston Running Club, raced to the finish line five seconds ahead of second place finisher Brendon Lynch, of Cambridge. Wells, looking to defend his 2003 title, actually ran a faster time this year (33:42), but that earned him a third place trophy this time around.

The top 10 was rounded by Gregory Putnam of Reading (34:15), Mel Gonsalves of Avon (34:38), Paul Hughes of Whitman (34:45), Robert Chasen of Weymouth (35:14), JJ Prior of Weymouth (35:56), Alec Petro of Duxbury (36:03) and Cohasset's own J. Patrick Kennedy (36:05).

"This was definitely a very competitive race at the top," con-

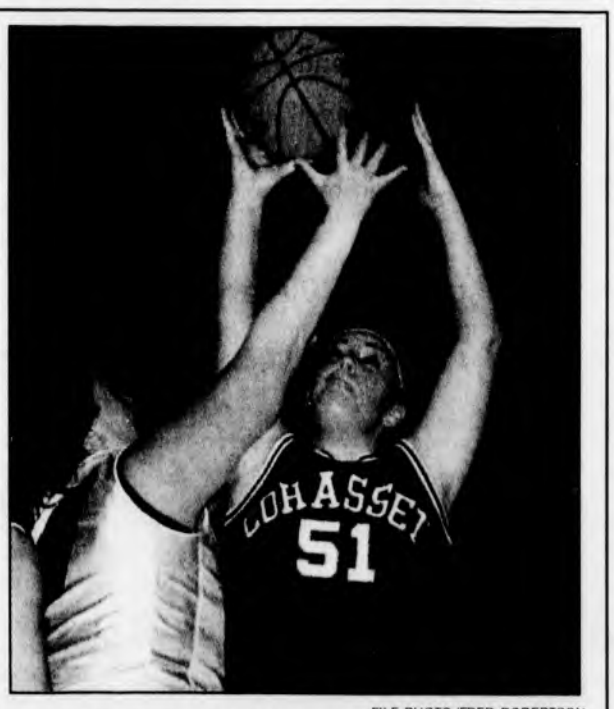
All-Scholastic girls basketball team

Cohasset's Buckley and Anderson named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

The competition for spots was heated, with 10 of our 12 teams ringing up winning records and qualifying for the state tourney. Scituate had a playoff game for the first time in eight years, but that was just half as good a story as the one at Cohasset High, literally. This was the first postseason trip for the Lady Skippers in 16 years, as local coaching legend John Levangie came out of retirement to direct the smallest school in our readership to a 14-6 regular season.

The highlight of actual postseason play, though, was Weymouth advancing all the way to the Div. 1 South Sectional semifinals.



Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 20, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top girls basketball players in Marinerland for this honor:

Casey Anderson - Junior
Power Forward - Cohasset

A superior athlete who really busted out this season to lead the South Shore League in scoring (16.5 per game)... was key contributor in Lady Skippers first winning season (14-6) and

ALL STARS, PAGE 18

Boy, did Casey Anderson (#51) explode on the scene this winter. The CHS junior finished third in the South Shore League scoring race (12.9 ppg) and earned league all-star honors while leading the Lady Skippers to their first playoff berth in 16 years. Yeah, she was an easy choice for All-Scholastic honors.

Thanks for nothing, Mother Nature

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

This space you're looking at here: it was supposed to contain reports of athletic achievements in track, baseball, softball, tennis or lacrosse. Ditto for a lot of the other spaces on this page and throughout the section.

Regular readers may also detect something familiar about a lot of the photos you're looking at here. Yeah, that's because you have seen them before in these pages. That's what happens when every sporting event you put in a photo request for gets washed out.

Thanks for nothing, Ma Nature.

So, instead of going to a baseball game Monday and a lacrosse game Tuesday and filling both those nights with phone calls to assorted coaches, this enterprising sports guy is being forced to look outside his normal purview.

Not that I'm complaining, mind you. If I did that, I'd no doubt get slapped by a local Athletic Director or 10. They're the ones, after all, whom good old Ma is really wearing down.

Take generally good-natured Cohasset High AD Ron Ford, for example. He's not so good-natured these days. He has eight spring athletic programs. Combined, the eight varsity teams have played just one game through this past Tuesday. He's postponed 18 sporting events, five of those being the second attempts at games.

"You're complaining to me?" Ron remarked with a humorless chuckle earlier this week when this typist, upon hearing about a postseason qualification in 16 years...5-foot-11 power forward is strong inside and has a deadly touch on her jumper inside 12 feet...also led team in rebounding...credits CHS assistant coach Dave Gianferante with "tweaking" her shot....lauded as a relentless worker...South Shore League all-star...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...also a top soccer and softball player at CHS...led state tourney qualifying soccer team in goals scored this past fall...captains the softball season this spring and has been named a soccer captain for next fall... involved in Appalachia Service Project...Class Treasurer since her freshman year...plays AAU basketball for Coastal Pops out of Marshfield...a lifeguard at the Cohasset Swim Center and a coach of the Cohasset Swim Team in the summer...hopes to play Div. 3 college basketball and has taken part in several recruiting camps...leaning toward studying nursing in college...sister of former CHS football, hockey and lacrosse all-star Tom Anderson, a 2003 graduate now playing college lacrosse... Cohasset Coach John Levangie: "Casey's work ethic and strong all-around game really set her apart. She's very tough to stop in close. She came to play every single game, every single practice."

Jenn Buckley
Senior (Capt.)
Shooting Guard - Cohasset

Jenn Buckley

Jenn is now a five-time Mariner All-Scholastic, drawing the honor twice previously in both soccer and track...as this suggests, she is as superb overall athlete, and this year that translated to big things on the hardwood...played a key role in helping the Lady Skippers to their first winning season (14-6) and postseason qualification in 16 years...was team leader in assists and 3-point shooting...averaged 9.5 points per game...South Shore League all-star...lauded for clutch play and leadership qualities...hit big 3-pointer at buzzer to lift Cohasset to key win over SSL rival Abington late in season...5-foot-5 athlete swung between both guard spots this season...an excellent defender...involved in chorus at CHS...plans to major in Nursing at Northeastern University...collegiate athletics are not a priority, but will remain active intramurally...Cohasset coach John Levangie: "Jenn is like another coach on the floor. She was our leader both on and off the floor, and just a very intelligent player. She's also a great athlete. She was at her best when the game was on the line."

Terri Duffy - Sophomore Forward - Marshfield

Had a breakout season for the Lady Rams, finishing the year as the team's leading scorer with 14.1 ppg...The Old Colony League All-star was also the team's leading rebounder with 11 per game...Her tough post play was essential to the Lady Rams' stellar season, in which they finished with a 16-5 record and fourth seed in the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney...It was the team's first trip to the postseason in several years...Duffy scored 22 points in a victory over Taunton...The squad went 10-4 in the OCL, good for third...Just a sophomore, Duffy still has a lot of playing to do at MHS.

Lauren Jentzen -
Senior (Capt.)
Point-guard - Marshfield

A solid all-around player for the Lady Rams this season, Jentzen averaged 9.2 points per game, second on the team, but led Marshfield in assists and steals...Speed was this guard's greatest asset, as her quickness made it nearly impossible for opposing defenses to press...Deadly on a fast break, Jentzen gave Marshfield the ability to turn the tide in a game...The result was a 16-5 season, No. 4 seed in the Div. 1 South Sectional, and 10-4 finish in the OCL...Perhaps better known for her soccer skills, Jentzen helped lead Marshfield to the Div. 1 South finals last fall...She has accepted a scholarship to play soccer at Div. 1 Syracuse University. Marshfield coach Rick Fredericks: "She was instrumental in just about everything that took place this season. She was an inspiration to the team both on and off the court. She will truly be missed."

Kendall Carlson - Junior
Forward - Weymouth

Was the team's leading scorer this season with an average 11.5 points per game and was among the leading rebounders on the team...The two-time Bay State Carey All-star was an offensive threat from all over and hit the 20-point plateau in three games this season...An aggressive and smart post player, Carlson helped lead the Lady Wildcats to a 12-8 regular season record and run to the semifinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney before falling to top seed and then-unbeaten Dartmouth...Scored 20 points against Boston English in the opening round...Just a junior, Carlson has already been elected captain for next season. Weymouth coach Steve Shoff: "Kendall is definitely one of our leaders on offense. She can play forward or guard and is equally effective at both positions. She had a great tournament."

Colleen Sinewick -
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Weymouth

Praised by her coach for being one of the best leaders ever at Weymouth, Sinewick's influence on and off the court proved invaluable this season...The Bay State Carey All-star was second on the team in scoring with an average 8.5 points per game and had about 9 rebounds per game...Quickness was one of her greatest assets as was her ability to get to the foul line...The role she played this season was instrumental in the Lady Wildcats' (14-9) run in the Div. 1 South Sectional, in which they reached the semifinals...Also on the swim team and National Honor Society, Sinewick plans to attend college in the fall. Weymouth coach Steve Shoff: "Colleen was an excellent leader and was on the court at all times. She's quick off the dribble and defensively guarded the opposing team's best player."

Ashley Mariani -
Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Rockland

Deadly from just about everywhere on the court, this Patriot League All-star led the Lady Bulldogs in scoring with an average 12.5 points per game...Was most deadly from behind the arch, where she drained a team-leading 41 three-pointers this season...Equally effective defensively, Mariani was among the team leaders in steals and her quickness made it hard for opposing defenses to press...Her performance this season helped Rockland to a 13-7 overall mark and berth in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney...The Lady Bulldogs went 9-3 in the PL for second place. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "Ashley really stepped up this season, particularly on defense. Offensively, she ran the break well and is just a pure shooter. We call her 'the scorer'."

CHS senior captain Jenn Buckley (right) was vital to the Lady Skippers cause both on and off the hardwood.

Shawna Carroll - Sophomore
Center - Rockland

A starting center the last two seasons, Carroll has continued to develop as one of the Patriot League's better post players since starting her varsity career in the eighth grade...Aggressive and already playing well beyond her years, Carroll was second on the Rockland (13-7, 9-3 PL) team in scoring with an average 10 points per game this season, good for second on the team...A two-time PL All-star, Carroll led the team in rebounding with an average 7 boards per game...Though primarily used as a center, Carroll can play from just about anywhere...A workhorse under the basket, Carroll has the ability to create turnovers, particularly by picking off passes to the inside...Her season was cut short down the stretch as she sustained a knee injury and could not play in the postseason...Still has two more seasons at RHS. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "Each year Shawna has improved, but this year she really blossomed. She plays with a lot more confidence and really came into her own. The league is really taking notice of her too."

Hollie O'Bryan -
Senior (Capt.)
Point-guard - Rockland

Had some big shoes to fill at the point-guard position this season and did a respectable job...A three-year starter for the Lady Bulldogs, O'Bryan sacrificed her own offensive stats to run the floor and distribute the ball to others, making her among the leaders in assists...A talented three-point shooter, O'Bryan's solid ball handling skills and speed were assets at the new position...Defensively, O'Bryan always drew the role of guarding the opposing team's best player...Her efforts helped the Lady Bulldogs finish second in the Patriot League (9-3) and make the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney (13-7)...Also captain on the softball squad and excellent student at RHS, O'Bryan plans to attend a Div. 1 college in the fall. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "It was a new position for her and she provided the kind of unselfish contribution that every team needs. She was the real leader on the team."

Katie Boutilier - Senior Center - Hingham

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Boutilier led the Hingham team in scoring for the second-straight season with an average 14 points per game, which was second in the Patriot League...Surrounded by a young and inexperienced team, Boutilier's confidence as a three-year starter at center was unwavering...Also the team's leading offensive rebounder, Boutilier averaged 7 per game...A solid free throw shooter, Boutilier was named a unanimous PL All-star for the second-straight year...Her post play helped the rebuilding Harborwomen to an 11-8 overall record and berth in the Div. 2 South Sectional... Boutilier plays year round and plans to attend either NYU or Rochester in the fall. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "She's probably one of the best low-post players in the league. She's very strong offensively and knows how to draw fouls."

Heather Boles -
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Hingham

Perhaps one of the most unheralded players on our team, Boles' leadership and gritty play made her impossible to pass up...This Patriot League All-star played big in several games this season, seemingly always making the tough shot or pulling down the big rebound when needed most...Boles averaged 9.8 points per game, second on her team, and led the team in steals and rebounds...Also had a knack for knowing when to give up the ball, finishing second assists...Averaged 15 points a game in the Harborwomen's (11-8, 7-5 PL) two meetings with league champs Duxbury, and in wins over Div. 1 Quincy and Bridgewater-Raynham, a South finalist...Also a soccer player at HHS, Boles plans to attend Boston University in the fall. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "Heather was a quiet leader who allowed us to do a lot of things. She had a knack for performing at her best against the best competition."

Erin Curran - Junior
Point-guard - Abington

This two-time All-Scholastic is simply a fearless player...Always one of the smallest players on the court, Curran also always played well beyond her height...Was the team's leading scorer for the second year in a row, averaging 16 points per game...A primetime player and two-time South Shore League All-star could score from anywhere, but proved most deadly from behind the arch where she consistently hit multiple treys in a game...Her confident play helped the lead the Green Wave to an 8-4 record in the SSL, good for second, and 9-10 overall finish...Just a junior, Curran will return to captain the team next year. Abington coach Christi Harris: "Erin is always a leader out there," said Harris. "She is the best shooter on the team and displays excellent control."

Lindsey Arria - Junior
Point-guard - Hanover

Quickly becoming one of the most recognizable athletes on the South Shore, Arria is making her third appearance on our All-Scholastic team...The amazingly athletic point-guard led the team in scoring this season with an average 12.2 ppg, while adding 5.4 assists per game, and 9.8 rebounds per game...Arria also scored double-doubles in six games this season...Tallied 10 assists in the Patriot League All-star game, her third in as many years...Also a standout soccer and softball player at HHS, Arria will captain the team next winter. Hanover coach Kate Delaney: "The fact that she was named an All-star as a freshman player speaks for itself. She's a determined player and is just an outstanding athlete."

Stephanie Geehan
Sophomore
Power Forward - Braintree

Geehan makes her second all-scholastic team in as many years of high school basketball...the sophomore was once again a rebounding and defensive force for a very good Lady Wamps squad (16-8 overall, 11-5 in BSC)...averaged a team best 10.6 points per game on a very well balanced team to go along with team best totals in steals (4 pg), blocks (5 pg) and rebounds (10 pg)...court sense sets Stephanie apart...puts her long arms, 6-foot frame and excellent hoop sense to good use...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...a good student who hopes to play college basketball...plays basketball year round as a member of the AAU Bay State Magic team...also a standout volleyball player for the BHS varsity team the last two falls...brother Jonathan Geehan, a 2003 BHS graduate, was named a Mariner All-Scholastic for golf in 2002...Braintree coach Nick Krot: "Stephanie is just one of those girls who has a nose for the ball. She has terrific timing and instincts when it comes to stealing the ball or blocking shots. She still needs to get a little stronger physically, but she's just a sophomore."

Katie Castignetti
Senior (Capt.)
Point Guard - Braintree

Katie earns her second straight All-Scholastic honoring after playing a key role in directing the Lady Wamps to an excellent 16-8 season (11-5 in Bay State Conference play)...averaged a team best four assists per game as she took over the point guard position in her senior year...a very versatile players, as witnessed by the fact she played a different position in each of her three years with the varsity team, playing small forward as a sophomore and starting at shooting guard last year...averaged 9.3 points per game on a very well balanced team... BSC first team all-star after being a second teamer last season...best offensive output this season was a 22-point outburst against BSC arch-rival Weymouth...a very good defender who stepped it up even more in that area this season...won Braintree Youth Basketball Award this season...lauded for leadership ability both on and of court...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...played varsity soccer and softball at BHS in her freshman year, but decided to concentrate on basketball after that...plays AAU basketball year round with the Bay State Magic...an honors student with a 3.2 GPA...ranked 49th in her class of 331...has made honor roll for 14 consecutive term...Spanish National Honor Society...a four year member of student government...DARE High School Role Model...Braintree coach Nick Krot: "Katie was a very good team leader. She's very tough, mentally and physically. She was probably my best defensive player and a great decision-maker. The kids really leaned on her for that."

Kate Carlezon - Sophomore
Power Forward - Scituate

Boy, did she explode on the scene...a solid contributor as a freshman, Kate busted out as a sophomore to win the Patriot League scoring title (16.7 ppg) and earn league MVP honors to boot...was big part of Lady Sailors first winning season (12-8) and postseason qualification in eight years...averaged 12.2 rebounds per game, blocked 59 shots on the season and shot 49 percent from the floor...season highlights included 22 point-19 rebound effort in first win over PL rival Rockland in over a decade) and a career best 27 point, 18 rebound game versus Notre Dame to end the regular season... Patriot league all-star...also a standout soccer player at SHS...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...hopes to play college basketball...Honor Roll student...plays AAU basketball in the spring and summer for the Coastal Pops...previously played Club Soccer for the South Coast Scorpions... Scituate coach Jessica Blanchard: "I sometimes forget that Kate is only a sophomore. She is such a presence inside and so mature as a player. I love her competitiveness. She is not afraid to go inside and mix it up. She hates to lose and that drive to win kept us in a lot of games this season. She was so honored to be named Patriot League Player of the Year, but humble. She deserves every ounce of success she achieved this season because of her hard work on and off the court."

Cohasset Boys Take 2004 Indoor Soccer Championship

The Cohasset Soccer Club won the South Shore Sports Center Boys Under 10 open division championship Saturday morning by handing number one Hingham a 3-2 defeat.

Cohasset entered the division playoffs Friday night in third place with a season record of five wins, one loss and one tie. Matched against the second place Weymouth Wildcats, Cohasset trounced their opponent with an impressive 9-1 ,victory. One week earlier, this same Weymouth team had stunned Cohasset with its only season loss.

Strong defensive support by all members of the team allowed goalkeepers to minimize the opponent's scoring opportunities and to maintain constant offensive pressure. Good job boys and many thanks to practice Coach Joe Coggins and parents for their support. See you outdoors.

Led by Coaches Alex Adkins, Ed Fontaine and Peter Timothy, the Cohasset Boys Under 10 Team is: Jonah Adkins, Nicholas Brown, Ben Curley, Christian Davis, Andrew Fontaine, Hunter Forrer, Taylor Golz, Brendan Kearney, Robbie Mahoney, Morgan McCarthy, Connor O'Brien, Tucker Oddleifson and Jamie Timothy.

Youth girls roll in openers against Quincy

Practice in the freezing rain on the blacktop at the Deer Hill School paid dividends for the Cohasset youth girls lacrosse teams, as they blasted teams from Quincy on soggy fields on April 4.

The week's rains had closed the fields, and blacktop practices don't allow for scrimmaging, so when the games were moved to Quincy, it meant that the Cohasset teams would play their first opponents without having been able to scrimmage full field.

Still, the increased stick work on the hard surface paid off, as it translated into dominant performances all day long.

The Cohasset Blue 13-U team - made up of fifth and sixth graders - opened the day by running up a huge early lead on Quincy, which had canceled its practices because of the rains.

Leigh Collins scored the first goal of the season less than a minute into the game. Maddy Altholtz scored a few moments later, followed by Collins again and by birthday girl Olivia Sullivan. Isabelle Franklin and Amy Meikleham stretched the lead to 6-0, before Meikleham fed Sophie Bertolami for a score. Bertolami then rang up an unassisted goal to close out the first-half scoring at 8-0.

For Collins, the two goals were one more than she scored in all of 2003.

Chelsea Silvia opened the second half with her first career points, feeding Franklin for one score then netting an unassisted goal. Anna Michalowski, Hannah Burgess and Kathleen Kelly all scored their first goals, sandwiched around tallies from Altholtz and Meikleham, as the game ended in a 15-0 whitewash. Katy Baker and Lindsey Davis picked up assists in the second half.

As good as the offense was, the defense was equally impressive, with Megan Richardson and Mimi Mahoney repeatedly killing off any Quincy threat, helped by Cally Altholtz and Eliza Kinnealey.

The defense was so dominant that Quincy managed just three shots on goal, all of which were stopped by the Jaffe sisters, Thomson stopping the only shot she faced in the first half, with Whitney racking up two saves while playing in the mud during the second half.

It was more of the same when the 15-U team (seventh and eighth graders) took to the sloppy field for the day's second game.

Gabriella Flibotte opened the scoring, before Jenny Cahill converted a cross-crease feed from McKenna Teague to make it 2-0. From there, Cohasset was never headed. The Quincy team did put up more of a fight and managed a number of early shots, but the Cohasset defense of Lindsay Hill, Rebecca Evans, Amanda Masotta, Natalie Hunt and Liz Tetrault - backed by Thomson Jaffe in the cage - repeatedly turned Quincy scoring threats into fast breaks going the other way.

Teague, Flibotte and Katelyn Ryan converted three of those chances to give Cohasset a 5-0 lead at the half-time break.

The second half of the game saw the Cohasset offense bog down in the muddy end of the field, although it still managed to outscore Quincy 3-2 on the strength of two more goals from Flibotte and a solo dash from Caitlin Mahoney. Mahoney, Flibotte and Kaley Madge also picked up assists on the afternoon.

Thomson Jaffe finished the game with six saves.

The Cohasset White 13-U team will make up its postponed opener against Hingham on Saturday, April 10, while the 15-U team will next take the field on April 18, when it is joined by the sixth-grade players for a road trip to Martha's Vineyard.

whole new batch of postponements, wondered openly about how this week's Mariner sports sections would be filled.

Compounding difficulties this week for all of us were the Passover observances. This simply piled on to the problems created by poor drainage. After all, water doesn't move all that swiftly when the temperatures keep falling below freezing.

The concern for causing real harm to fields is a huge issue right now. It will take many more days like sunny Tuesday before area ADs will again start sleeping peacefully through the night.

Well, Ron and Bill and Frank and Kathleen and Jim and Brian and Lou and Franny and Bill and Bob and Jeff and Fish: I guess this is why you get the modest salary bump.

Fortunately, there is lots going on in the sports world these days outside my normal purview:

So, are folks going to panic mode a bit too quickly on Pedro? Perhaps a bit. Yeah, there are some troublesome signs, but also bear in mind his so so April's of years past. Given his well-documented shoulder concerns, Pedro does not do a lot of throwing in the off season. Thus, he comes into camp behind the majority of his peers. He concentrates on mechanics in location in the preseason, and that makes him somewhat predictable at times. He also will not cut loose in a game that does not count. The 2001 all-star game taught him that much.

In case you haven't noticed, the days of the consistent 95-plus mile per hour heater are long gone. He saves those for special moments in September and October. He simply will not put those kinds of demands on his arm any more. Why? Because he wants to pitch effectively for many more years.

And that's something Pedro may well be able to do. Over the past two seasons, Pedro has reinvented himself. He has gone from a premier power pitcher to a premier pitcher's pitcher. He has gone from being the master of blowing batters away with a variety of blazers to simply outsmarting them with varied great stuff. The numbers he posted last September show he can still put up numbers with anyone…and I mean anyone.

If he's still getting slapped around in late May, then I start to worry.

Hey, at worst, he's the best number three starter in the AL.

That said, I love the fact Theo Epstein has not signed any of his big five free agents to be (Pedro, Nomar, Derek Lowe, Jason Varitek, David Ortiz) to extensions, and not just because it should force them to push that much harder coming into a contract year.

There are some not so small question marks hanging over the two guys who are demanding the biggest ticket, Nomar and Pedro. If the Sox singed them to what they wanted right now, they might not have enough for any of the other three. And any one of those no signs could come back to haunt Theo and company for many years to come.

There are many baseball purists who argue Varitek was the MVP of last year's team. Not only is he a sensational defensive catcher and handler of pitchers, but he is at his best at the plate in pressure situations. Those are all attributes that are almost impossible to over rate.

Look what Lowe did in 2002 and down the stretch in '03. Outside of Pedro, Schilling, the Big Unit and a handful of others, that's been about as good as it's gotten in the Majors over the last few years. He's 30-years old and has displayed a very durable arm.

As for Ortiz: was last year an aberration of signs of things to come? Know this: there are serious baseball people who believe the latter is the greater probability. Big Dave had stretches where he was healthy in Minnesota in '01 and '02 where he looked to be on the verge of breaking out just like he did last year. The problem was he was unable to stay healthy for long stretches those two seasons, and that's why Theo Epstein was able to get him for such a discount last spring. If you're Theo, and Ortiz puts up numbers this season comparable to the ones he did last year, do you want to be in a situation where you're handcuffed financially?

If Pedro or Nomar have disappointing seasons, Theo may well be able to sign one or both for much shorter cash than the agents are bandying about at the moment. It also seems a worthwhile gamble to sit back and wait to see how much more the free agent market "adjusts."

And if the Sox re-sign neither Nomar nor Pedro, they'll have all that money at their disposal. This ownership has convinced this longtime fan they'll spend it well.

The bottom line, as I see it, Sox management is holding most of the cards on this front.

Some might accuse me of not being a "true Celtics fan," but I don't want to see the green in the playoffs this year. Sure, it'd be nice to get Ricky Davis, Jiri Welsch and Marcus Banks some playoff experience. Even the expected orie and done would likely be somewhat beneficial to these young, improving players who appear to be a big part of the C's long term plans. But this team needs a lot more talent than it has right now, and the easiest way to procure that is via the draft lottery. Sorry, but I just can't get the visions of Emeka Okafor in green outta my head. Of course, that'd be a pretty long shot even if the Cavs did overtake the C's for the final playoff spot—something else that seems pretty unlikely to happen. Oh well.

On to cheerier matters, the Bruins are absolutely for real. With or without Joe Thornton, the B's seem pretty well equipped to handle the Canadiens in the first round, especially with the way Sergei Samsonov and Travis Green have been picking it up down the stretch.

I've been as critical as most anyone of Bruins management the last few years, but I can do nothing but cheer the trade deadline acquisitions of Michael Nylander and Sergei Gonchar. These are exactly the types of players the Bruins needed to add to the mix—a creative second line center and a defenseman who can QB the power play and carry the puck—to become legitimate contenders.

The black and gold can now trot out two legitimate big time scoring lines, a very good multipurpose third line and a strong true checking line, as well as a big physical blueline corps and a goalie who's capable of carrying his team for stretches, if it comes to that.

Honestly, I can't remember ever feeling this good about a Bruins team heading into the playoffs. Those overachieving teams that went to the Cup Finals in'86 and '88 were great to watch, but we knew even before the playoffs started they were, at best, sacrificial lambs for those incredible Oilers teams of Gretzky, Messier, Coffey, Fuhr, et al.

In Bill we trust and all but, crimminy, I have a tough time getting past the defection of Ted Washington.

Sure, I believe (like most, as near as I can tell) that Belichick's system is the number one star of this two time Super Bowl champion team, but isn't there anyone worth paying super star bucks for?

Pats management believes in spreading the wealth both on and of the field. The actual football systems on both sides of the lien of scrimmage seem to prevent players from putting up superstar-type numbers. Rather, many players wind up with very respectable numbers.

It is therefore not surprising to find that, while the Pats top 10 or so players make less money than their counterparts with the majority of other teams, New England's players in the teens and 20s on the team pay scale make, on average, a good deal more than their counterparts.

So, the Patriots have a strong middle class, otherwise known as depth. Some might argue that, above any other single factor, is at the heart of their success. I wouldn't necessarily argue. I just believe there are exceptions to every rule, and I fear Ted Washington might have been one of those.

Oh, and while I'm on the Pats, is there anyone out there who doesn't believe Ty Law's crying about mistreatment was anything more than a desperate attempt to force the Pats to trade him and give him a shot at a Champ Bailey type signing bonus? The Pats have him sewn up for two more years on a deal that, by the way, still makes him one of the highest paid corners in the game. He has nothing to cry about. Sure, it's understandable that he'd want to cash in on what was quite likely his last "great season," but he's already one of the richest men in the game. Enough's enough already.

The "Hey Parents, give it a rest" column I submitted a few weeks back struck a much more resonant chord than I ever imagined. The calls, e-mails and comments continue to spill in.

Most of the feedback, I'm happy to say, has been positive. Of course, that's not surprising, considering the majority of folks I've heard from are coaches. But there have also been quite a few parents in there and even a couple of local student-athletes.

Based on this response, and some of the things I've since heard, the level of parental meddling and negativity may actually be worse out there than I suspected when I threw that piece together. All's I can say to that is Yikes!

At least there have been a half dozen parents or so who've called or e-mailed to let me know that column has led them to re-examine their actions at games. Each time I heard or read that, it made my day.

Hey, it's a start…even if only one of them truly meant it.

I was so desperate for things to cover this week, I even looked into covering a Tom Cuddihy horseback riding competition. Unfortunately, no one seemed quite certain when and where the event was taking place.

Swinging into action

CHS softball team finally gets going after series of postponements

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

April showers have forced the postponement of the first three games for the Cohasset High varsity softball team. The wet weather, however, failed to dampen team spirits.

While waiting for the field to dry out, Coach Deb Bostwick wasted no time in assigning extra practice drills including running stairs and hitting.

"The girls took this opportunity as a chance to polish off their skills and to condition," stated Coach Bostwick. "With access to the high school gym and fitness center, the girls' skills are constantly improving."

The Skippers non-league season opener against Holbrook will reschedule to April 30th. Last year, the Skippers lost this encounter.

The rainy weather also forced Monday's game against the Mashpee Falcons to a later date. Cohasset last year came up short against this team. However, the Skippers stand a better chance against the Falcons in 2004.

Centerfielder Cecelia Chapman expressed strong optimism.

"If we had pitchers like Virginia Spofford, Katie James, and Christina Pinkus last year, we may have been able to overpower the Falcons," she observed.

Tuesday's scheduled game against Norwell became the third April postponement. The Skippers feel good about this showdown.

Claimed Captain Casey Anderson: "We fall short in terms of experience compared to Norwell. Yet, we can and will beat them."

This year, Coach Bostwick wants her starting lineup to set the tone for the Skippers early in the games. Christina Pinkus, Caitlin Gontarz, and captains Danielle Pinkus and Rachael Doyle will run the infield.

Caitlin Condon, Cecelia Chapman, and Melissa Crowley-Buck will watch for the long balls in left, center and right. Virginia Spofford, Christina Pinkus, and Katie James will step up to the mound. Captain Casey Anderson will catch for the Skippers.

Bostwick also feels this year's team has a very positive attitude and a low-stress atmosphere. The absence of cliques also helps to keep morale very positive.

Today, the Skippers traveled to Hull for their first game of the year. Next week will certainly test the team's strength with games against Carver and defending champs Abington.

The Cohasset sixth grade girls travelling team is OCL champs.

COASTAL STARS YOUTH HOCKEY

Mite C2

In what was the first road trip journey for the majority of the Coastal Stars- Mite C "IceDawgs", the team rose to the occasion and emerged as the champions! Over 30 family members and friends joined the team to make the voyage to Martha's Vineyard where "The Dawgs" posted 3 shutouts and then overcame a 2-0 deficit in the tournament's championship game to win 6-2 and take the tournament. Wins over the MV Terriers 5-0, South Shore Seahawks 3-0, and Braintree 7-0 all led to the Sunday morning championship win. While every member of the team contributed to the success, this tournament brought to light the real purpose of youth sports: Teamwork, Sportsmanship, and Fun! The boys were gentlemen and represented the Coastal Stars organization well.

Squirt C3

The Squirt C3 team kicked off the Yankee Conference playoffs with a thrilling 6-5 come from behind victory over Plymouth. After falling behind 2-0 to start the game, Ally Ryan got the Stars on the board with a thrilling end to end rush, culminating with a backhand shot over the goalies right shoulder. Moments later Mike Timcoe tied the score with hard seeing-eye wrist shot from the point that found its way into the net. After giving up the lead again to Plymouth, Johnny Sinkins fired one in from the right post that caromed off the goalies shoulder to tie it up at 3-3. Plymouth refused to back down and again took the lead as their player #6 scored his fourth goal of the game. Just when the chip were down, Mike Mascuilli did his best Emeril impression and kicked it up a notch. With all Stars forwards applying offensive pressure, Mascuilli swooped on the puck behind the Plymouth net and tucked in a beauty of wrap-around goal. Moments later with the pressure still on, dug the puck out of a pile of bodies in front of the crease and slammed in the game winner. Once again a combination of aggressive offense, stifling defense, and clutch goaltending spelled victory for the Stars C3. Way to Stars!

PeeWee C1

The Coastal Stars Pee-Wee C1 team defeated Braintree 3 with a strong 5-2 playoff win on Sunday. After finishing the regular season with an impressive 16-5-1 record, the Starts Pee-Wee C1 team wasted little time in getting the post-season scoring started. At 12:50 of the first period, winger Brian Meehan circled the Braintree net to set up winger Chris Fazzina for the Stars' first goal. Meehan and Fazzina combined again later in the first period to set up center Justin Yeager for the Stars' second goal. The Stars held on to a 2-1 lead through a wild up and down second period. Braintree tied the game at 2-2 early in the third period. But, the Stars were not about to give up. Less than a minute later, winger Gordy Smith charged the length of the ice and fired a hard wrist shot past the Braintree goalie to put the Stars up 3-2. With less than three minutes remaining in the game, Meehan and Fazzina combined again to give the Stars' a two-goal lead. This time, Fazzina fed Meehan with a perfect pass in front. Meehan fired a one-timer high into the upper corner of the Braintree net to put the Stars up 4-2. With only seconds remaining, Phil Murphy collected the Star's final goal with a terrific rush and shot. The entire Stars' squad played extremely well to earn its first playoff victory. The defensive unit comprised of Kevin O'Connell, Geoff Evans, Connor Ofsthun and Mike Halloran continued to dominate their opponents in the defensive end with hard checking and good outlet passing. Geoff Evans, in particular, made a number of good checks on the Braintree skaters. The Stars benefited also from the strong skating and great passing from Andrew Bell, Mike Caira and Joe Fitzsimmons in the neutral and offensive zones. Stars' goalie, John Carrigg, had another great outing in net. Carrigg turned back countless shots throughout the game and controlled the puck to minimize rebounds.

YOUTH BASKETBALL REPORTS

Liberty Team wins Rec hoop title

The Liberty team defeated Kay's Kids 32-25 Saturday in a well-played game to capture the championship of the Cohasset Recreation Department indoor basketball program in the 5th and 6th grade age group for girls. Liberty Coach Ben Leong is shown with his squad displaying their champion medals and gift certificates to Wilbur's. Seated (l-r) are: Rhianna Fitts, Kaci Kucinski, Meaghan Leong, Sophie Bertolami, and Hannah Burgess. Missing from photo is Molly McElgunn. Members of the runner-up Kay's Kids team with their finalist medals are: Logan Pratt, Eliza Kinnealey, Brittany Pinkus, Chelsea Silvia, Paige Smith, and Emma Quigley. Both teams wish to thank the Cohasset Basketball Boosters for sponsoring the Saturday morning program in conjunction with the Recreation Department; Mr. Don DeMichele for his untiring efforts in coordinating the program; the school custodians who were on hand to open the doors, set-up, and help things run smoothly; and our team sponsors.

Sixth graders wear OCL crown

The Cohasset girls sixth grade basketball team won the Old Colony Basketball League with a hard fought 14 to 11 win over Braintree. The match-up in the championship was set after Cohasset easily beat Marshfield and held on to defeat a tough Whitman team on Saturday to advance to the finals on Sunday in Bridgewater. The hoopsters took their 13-1 record into the final against Braintree who had an identical 13-1 record. Appropriately, the two best teams faced off in the final.

Cohasset opened the game with their aggressive man-to-man defense, while Braintree employed a zone. Points were at a premium in the first half as one of Cohasset's best players, Lindsey Allard, was forced to the bench with four fouls. The offensive load was passed to Meredith Kelly, Samantha Crough and Mimi Mahoney who kept the Skippers in the game and as a result Braintree's lead was only 9 to 8 at the half.

In an attempt to cut down on the number of fouls and to neutralize Braintree's strong inside game, Cohasset switched to a zone defense in the second half. The results were spectacular as Braintree only managed to score two points in the entire second half. Isabelle Franklin was flying all over the court blocking shots and pulling down rebounds.

Amy Meikleham, Tori Lehr and Erin Fontaine provided strong support off the bench, Kelly made powerful moves to the basket, while Mahoney and Crough shut down Braintree's guards and moved the ball effectively on offense.

Allard checked back into the game with 10 minutes to go and provided an immediate spark. Cohasset was able to score six points in the second half to win the game 14 to 11.

The girls finished the year with 14 wins and only 1 loss. Throughout the year every player on team contributed to the year's success. If you see any of the following girls around town be sure to congratulation them on a great year that proved hard work and teamwork is rewarded: Lindsey Allard, Samantha Crough, Taryn Donohue, Erin Fontaine, Isabelle Franklin, Meredith Kelly, Meaghan Leong, Tori Lehr, Mimi Mahoney, Amy Meikleham, Lucy Noble, Lucy O'Keefe, Chelsea Silvia, and Olivia Sullivan. Thank you girls for a fun year and for the gift certificates!

Kay's Kids have nothing to hang their heads over after a strong second place finish.

The Liberty team was tops in the Rec League.

Hingham's Josiah Hatch looks almost relaxed as he places 11th overall

J. Patrick Kennedy was the first Cohasset resident to cross the finish line, taking 10th place overall.

Race-by-the-Sea draws near record field

tinued Goodwin. "We had a lot of very good runners coming from all over. It was a diverse group too, though. It continues to be a nice event for the town and running community."

Louisa Servin, of Middleboro, was tops among the females, crossing the finish line 13th overall with a time of 37:34, which was more than two minutes better than last year's best time.

North Attleboro's Lynn Johnson (15th, 37:48) was not far off that pace and Greenfield's Marjorie Shearer (20th, 38:34) was the third female finisher. Cohasset's Linda Nistico Klier finished sixth among all females, placing 32nd overall with her run of 40:30.

The all-time male Cohasset Road Race by the Sea record is held by Boston's John Kessinger, his 1980 time of 29:30 still standing as the mark to beat 24 years later.

Cohasset's own Sarah Linsley, who won the female race in its first seven years, owns the women's record with her 1983 time of 33:25.

Cohasset was very well represented in the age-group categories:

Cohasset girls swept the top three spots in the 14-17 age division. Cohasset High senior Jenn Buckley, who was also this week named to the Mariner All-Scholastic girls basketball team, was first to cross in 44:10. Her hoop teammate Chelsea Grossman, 16, (51:11) was second and Catherine Ernst (51:16) third.

Cohasset's Paul Cotter, 17, won the male- 14-17 division with his run of 47:26, and CHS sophomore Brandon Smith, 16, was third in that division (50:20).

Brandon's younger brother Andrew, 12, took third in the Under-14 division (50:47).

Cohasset's Barbara Buckley, 42, (42:55) and Eileen Norton, 40, (43:49) placed two-three in the female 40-49 division.

Of course, the biggest winner on the day was the Polio Foundation, as much of the proceeds from the race will go toward the eradication of that crippling disease that still affects children in the poorest of countries, and the various other causes the Cohasset Rotary Club, the longtime sponsors of the Roadrace By-the-Sea, helps support through this race.

The Rotary Club set a fundraising goal of $5,000-$8,000 for this year's race. Goodwin figures when it's all counted up the final figure will come in a lot closer to the higher figure.

When the Cohasset Rotary Club launched a three year effort last year to raise $10,000 for the fight against polio, Club president Damian Grozier explained how Rotary International had wanted the world to be polio free by the year 2000. That date proved to be too ambitious so the organization refocused its efforts last year to raise some $80 million to eradicate the disease from the planet by 2006. Rotary International's efforts to rid polio in affected areas include: public education to promote immunization; getting the vaccine to children in remote regions; forming public-private partnerships that fortify government health programs; and strengthening a global laboratory network to support disease surveillance efforts after polio has been eradicated.

The Cohasset Rotary will also continue to support local programs, such as high school scholarships and Father Bill's in Quincy. The club has two main fundraisers a year, the race and selling advertisements for the Cohasset Rotary phonebooks.

Also likely to see some support money this year from the Cohasset Rotary are the local Appalachia Project and the Cohasset Recreation Department. Both non-profit groups had volunteers working the race. The Appalachia teenagers handed out water all along the course and the Rec. Department folks helped with traffic control and various other race day necessities.

"This is a twofold thing," noted Goodwin. "It gives people an opportunity to get involved and it gives us the opportunity to help them out financially. It's a win-win."

There were also a larger of number of volunteers than in recent years. In fact, Goodwin felt the level of local interest was up right across the board.

"We seemed to have more people lined up to watch the beginning of the race, and there were definitely more there for the finish than we've seen in a while," said Goodwin.

Fran Coffey did a nice job as Public Address announcer, and a group of volunteer spotters near the corner of Main Street and Highland relayed information quickly so that Coffey could announce the names of the runners as they headed down the home stretch.

"I think everyone who was associated with the race this year went away feeling pretty good," said Goodwin, "the runners, the volunteers, the townspeople, the Rotary club—right across the board. It was a good day."

SPORTS NOTES

Post 118 Legion baseball tryouts

Attention baseball players from Cohasset and Scituate. The Post 118 Legion baseball team will be holding tryouts on three Sundays in a row—April 25, and May 2 and 9, all starting at 4 p.m. at Sctiuate High School. Attendance and participation is mandatory for anyone wishing to play. Questions should be directed to coach Scott Arnold (781-545-1896).

Cohasset baseball/softball coaches clinic

Attention all Cohasset Baseball and Softball coaches and parents: There will be a mandatory coaches' clinic for all individuals interested in coaching in the Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Association program. To accommodate each of our busy schedules, interested individuals have the option of attending one of two required scheduled clinics. Parents who are interested in learning appropriate baseball / softball instructional techniques are also welcome to attend these sessions. Even the most astute coach always picks up a pointer or two. These meetings are scheduled at the Cohasset High School gym on either Saturday, April 10th from 9:00 AM to 11:00 AM or Thursday, April 15th from 7:30 PM to 9:30PM. The CYBSA is fortunate to have Lou Rettman, minor league scout and local baseball instructor, conducting one sessions. In addition, we're also lucky to have Al Galotta, the CHS Varsity Baseball coach attending the Saturday session. Galotta and Frank Niles of South Shore Baseball will be conducting the Thursday session.

Immediately following the Saturday, April 10th clinic, there will be player drafts for the softball, minor league baseball and farm league divisions. In addition, divisional schedules, Little League and local CYBSA rules and other helpful coaching material will be distributed on that day.

Little League now requires background checks on all league volunteers to ensure the safety of the children entrusted to our care. Should you be interested in coaching and have not already done so, please bring a photocopy of your license to the clinic where you will be asked to fill out the necessary forms. Individuals, however well intentioned, not complying will not be allowed to coach. Questions regarding this requirement may be confidentially directed to Liam O'Connell on (781) 383-9538.

Any questions concerning these coaching sessions may directed to Mark Chase on (781) 383-9122. Questions regarding the League draft may also be directed to Liam on (781) 383-9538.

Cohasset Soccer Club spring season to start April 10th

Following last week's rain-out, the Cohasset Soccer Club's spring season will start Saturday, April 10th, weather permitting. All players registered for the fall season are automatically registered to play in the spring.

The final schedule for the spring season is Boys Under 10 @ 9:30, Boys Pre Kindergarten @ 10:30 Boys Kindergarten @ 11:15, Boys 1st Grade @ 12:00, and Boys 2nd Grade @ 12:45.

The final girl's schedule is Girls Under 10 @ 8:30, Girls Pre Kindergarten and Kindergarten together @ 1:30, Girls 1st Grade @ 2:15, and Girls 2nd Grade @ 3:00.

There will also be games on the first Saturday of vacation week -- April 17th -- but no in-town games held the second weekend of the vacation week -- April 24th. Coastal League travel games will occur on both vacation weekends.

Any players who wish to play soccer this spring who have not yet registered can obtain registration forms at the Town Hall.

South Shore Basketball shooting clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept registrations at Town Hall for an off-season basketball shooting clinic for boys and girls, grades 6 through 12.

The clinic will be coached by Paul-Michael Quintin and be limited to 15 participants in each of the two sessions. The fee for this program that will meet Tuesday and Thursday evenings from April 27 through June 3 is $115 per player.

Session I, for boys and girls grades 6 to 8, meets from 5 to 6:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School gym.

South Shore Sr. softball steps up to the plate for a fourth season

The South Shore Senior Softball League, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, opens its fourth season on Sunday, April 25. The team, open to all South Shore men aged 55 and older, meets at 10 am at the Central Park Field in Scituate.

Proving that age is no barrier to fun and athleticism, the "boys of summer" play up to three times a week in the league. Games are scheduled Sunday and Wednesday mornings at 10 am and Thursday evenings at 5 pm. There is also a traveling team available for interested players to compete in games across the state. Players can play once or three times a week, as they wish. The season runs well into the fall.

Kevin McLaughlin joins league founder Jim Hyde as league commissioner this year. Anyone interested in joining the league can call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 to obtain a registration form. Cost for the season is $30, which covers a shirt, hat and as much softball as one wants to play.

Patterson Race set for April 18

Event: 3rd Annual Shawn D. Patterson Memorial & Scholarship Road Race, 5K/10K Run, 5K Walk and Children's Fun Run for ages 10 and under

When: Sunday, April 18th at 12:00 PM, Fun Run starts at 11:00 AM

Where: Gates Intermediate School, 327 First Parish Road, Scituate, MA

Number Pick-up/Registration: April 17, 10:00 AM-Noon and April 18(race day), beginning at 9:30 AM, Fee $15

Information: Coolrunning.com or call 508-790-3763.

Online application: http://www.coolrunning.com/applications/04/basic/ShawnPatterson.html.

April vacation baseball clinic

The South Shore Baseball Camp will provide an April vacation baseball clinic, beginning Tuesday, April 20, through Friday, April 23, at Barnes Field. The clinic runs from noon to 2:30 p.m. and this week-long program will cost $100 per participant. For more information, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. Registration forms can be found at the Recreation office, first floor, Town Hall.

Rec. Dept. offers safe boating course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session safe boating course offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the state of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the two-session course, which will be held on two consecutive Saturdays, May 8, and May 15, from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size, and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $40 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of the text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

Tennis Tourney in memory of Barbie Gurnis

On Friday, April 30th from 7pm - 12am, a tennis tournament will be held at The Kingsbury Club (Kingston) in memory of Barbie Gurnis. Proceeds from the event will be used to support the Duxbury Bay Maritime School's "Crossroads for Kids Maritime Adventures" program.

Maritime Adventures takes campers from Crossroads for Kids at Camp Wing in Duxbury and exposes them to sailing, rowing and marine ecology. Perhaps more importantly, the program also exposes them to the life-long lessons of responsibility and respect that are gained through these activities.

According to Ingid Drago, "Anyone who knew Barbie knows that she was an incredible athlete. She had many passions and sailing was always at the top of her list. Teaching sailing to kids who might not otherwise have that opportunity would have been something she felt was important. We are happy to have this positive way to remember a special friend."

The round robin style of play will be from 7-9pm and a reception will be held from 9-12. Players of all ability levels are welcome and encouraged to play. Food, dancing and a silent auction will also be part of the evening. Tickets for tennis and the reception are $75 per person, tickets for the reception only are $50 per person.

Tickets are available at The Kingsbury Club, the Duxbury Bay Maritime School or through Karen Butcher (934.7135), Ingrid Drago (585.8976) or Jamie Therrien (934.3223). For more information or to donate silent auction items, please call Karen, Ingrid or Jamie.

any culpability in the loss. "It was a strong varsity debut. She made some nice saves."

The coach also lauded the defensive play of Molly Kirk, Miranda Lanzzillotti, and Christen Reardon.

Faber, a senior captain, senior Nicole Turgiss and Rizzotti scored inside the game's first 10 minutes to post the visiting Skippers to a quick 3-0 lead. Sandwich then made some defensive adjustments that seemed to flummox the Skippers attack plan. The Knights finally got their offense going late in the half and potted a pair past Hamilton to go into the break trailing by just one, 3-2.

Sandwich picked up where it left off to open the second half, and buried another pair of goals inside the first five minutes to take a 4-3 lead.

Faber's second goal of the game ended a draught of 15 scoreless minutes and tied the game at 4-4 with 5:30 to play, opening the floodgates.

"There were seven goals in the game's first 44 or 45 minutes and then six in the last five," noted Sweeney. "If we'd had a few more seconds at the end, we'd have probably tied it up again."

Sandwich re-took the lead, 5-4, near the four minute mark, but Turgiss answered that with her second of the game 30 seconds later.

Then came Rizzotti's nifty tally. But all that wound up doing was setting the stage for a more dramatic Sandwich win.

"Offensively, I thought we showed we're going to have more balance than we had last year," said Sweeney, who has directed the Lady Skippers to winning records and postseason berths in both of his previous two seasons at the helm. "Defensively, we've still got some things to work on. But, all in all, I liked what I saw in the opener."

The girls saw their second scheduled game, at Norwell, postponed from last Thursday to this past Tuesday, and then postponed again to yesterday. Weather permitting, they'll be at Dartmouth this afternoon (4 p.m. start) for a non-league tilt, at Hanover on Monday (3:30 p.m.), host Martha's Vineyard on Tuesday (3:15 p.m.) and travel to New Bedford a week from today (3 p.m.).

Denim to Diamonds glitters for Art Center

Last Saturday night the River Club in Scituate was transformed into a glittering diamond mine complete with gem-studded guests as South Shore partygoers donned their favorite denim and jewels for the South Shore Art Center's Denim to Diamonds dance party.

The crowd delighted in the incomparable sounds of Bellevue Cadillac. Boots and tiaras, bejeweled blue jean jackets, rhinestone cowboys with jewels in their ears—participants all added their personal touch in support of the Art Center's expansion of its Arts to Go and Looking at Art outreach programs. The silent auction featured remarkable jewelry by 21 area jewelers and original handcrafted denim jackets embellished by 12 local artists. The announcement of the lucky winner of a diamond necklace and earring set, donated by sponsor King Jewelers, added to the festivities, as did the announcement of the Art Center's new corporate sponsor–Rockland Trust. This summer marks the beginning of the South Shore Art Center's 50th anniversary celebrations. For more information visit www.ssac.org or call 781-383-2787.

Back Roads of South Shore is making history

Hosts symposium Apr. 17 in Plymouth

The members of the Back Roads of the South Shore collaborative historical-programming organization knew they were onto something big when they all agreed to drop their fees and open the doors to their museums to the public last June. But until their story appeared on Cnn.com and in newspapers around the country thanks to an article penned by an Associated Press staff writer, they had no idea that they would be making history.

The success of the summer of 2003's 13-house, common free open house day lit a reassuring spark for the 10 organizations — Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate Historical Societies, the Isaac Winslow House, the John Alden House, the Duxbury Rural and Historical Society, the Jones River Village Historical Society, Pilgrim Hall Museum, Plymouth Antiquarian Society and the John Howland House — prompting them to consider expanding their programming beyond the open house day for the coming year. This year, they have taken two steps forward.

First, working on presenting a specific theme for this year's open house day, Saturday, June 26, they have invited new members to join the cause. Capitalizing on the area's rich maritime heritage, the Back Roads group asked one of the state's most well-known small museums, the Hull Lifesaving Museum, and one of the region's newest maritime-based non-profit organizations, the Jones River Village Ecology Center, to participate in this year's Back Roads Maritime Trail Day. Both groups eagerly jumped in and starting to work alongside the other organizations.

Views like this one of Boston Light from historic Fort Revere on Telegraph Hill in Hull are part of what makes the South Shore such an attraction for history buffs.

Second, the Back Roads group has organized the first-ever South Shore History Symposium, titled "Views Fore and Aft," to take place on Saturday, April 17, in the Mayflower Room of the Radisson Hotel in Plymouth. According to Patrick Browne, director of the Duxbury Rural and Historical Society, and a featured speaker at the symposium, "We feel this fills a void in providing a forum for discussion of the history of the region as a whole. Maritime history, being a strong theme in the history of each of these communities, seemed a logical choice for the first symposium."

"We feel this fills a void in providing a forum for discussion of the history of the region as a whole. Maritime history, being a strong theme in the history of each of these communities, seemed a logical choice for the first symposium."

— Patrick Browne, Duxbury Rural and Historical Society

The day's slate will feature David Ball and Fred Freitas of the Scituate Historical Society covering the topic of shipbuilding on the North River, Browne on the story of "King Caesar" Ezra Weston and the maritime world of the early 19th century, and a keynote address by Ben Cowie-Haskell, operations coordinator for the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary office in Scituate, on the most up-to-date information available on the recently-identified wreck of the steamship Portland, lost in 1898. John Galluzzo, editor of Wreck & Rescue Journal and a frequent contributor to the local Mariner newspapers, will cover shipwrecks and lifesaving along the South Shore, and Amanda Madeira and Polly Zajac, captain and educator of the fishing schooner Ernestina of Gloucester respectively, will carry the maritime history of the region into the future, detailing the education process that students undertake when learning about Massachusetts' seafaring past.

For Fred Hills of the Hingham Historical Society, a driving force behind the success of the Back Roads group, the choice of maritime history as a theme fits his hometown community perfectly. "There was a shipbuilding presence and remains a deep maritime history here in Hingham. The scope of the symposium should be of great interest to a lot of people in town. And as this is a first of a kind event, it should be well-received."

Hills also stated that the Hingham Historical Society will be proudly taking part in the year's open house event as well. "We'll have an exhibit at the Old Ordinary," he said, "one that will be devoted to Hingham's maritime history, with some rarely seen artifacts."

For Paula Fisher, marketing director of the Plymouth County Development Council /Convention and Visitors Bureau, the continuing collaboration of the varied historical societies and museums of the Back Roads group is an important model that she hopes other area organizations will look to as a template. "Working together is the main thrust of what the travel industry is advising in these times of economic challenge. When organizations like the many historical societies of the South Shore and Plymouth join together to promote the area as a whole, as they have done with the Back Roads program and upcoming South Shore History Symposium, as opposed to each town acting in a parochial manner and looking at other historic entities as competition, it achieves what we here at the Plymouth County CVB see as a priority. It encourages the crossing of town boundaries providing an impact far greater that the sum of its parts. It represents an effort to attract visitors to all of Plymouth County as well as forming a bond between organizations that can continue to develop and establish further promotional opportunities."

For more information on the Back Roads of the South Shore History Symposium or upcoming Maritime Trail Day, call Patrick Browne at the Duxbury Rural and Historical Society at 781-934-6106 or visit www.southshorebackroads.org.

Vernal pool workshop

"Understanding Creatures Small But Great" The First Herring Brook Watershed Initiative is sponsoring a Vernal Pool Workshop at the Ellis Estate on Country Way in Scituate on Saturday, April 10, from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Environmental specialists Andy Walsh, Garry Van Wart, Shan Morrissey and Linda Bornstein will be on hand to teach participants about the mini-watershed environment and fascinating inhabitants of vernal pools which only appear in the spring. In addition, participants will be taught how to certify a vernal pool for regulatory protection. The whole family is invited; suggested donation is $3.

Bug squad helpers

Volunteers are needed to take part in the "Bug Squad" which will have its first planning session on Tuesday evening, April 13, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in the TPMC Conference Room on Mill Wharf Plaza in Scituate Harbor (look for the FHBWI sign). Entomologist Fred Saint Ours will supervise the session where sites will be selected for dip-net collection of macro-invertebrates -- "bugs". This is a great opportunity for science enthusiasts of all ages to learn about the fascinating little critters that by their abundance and diversity reveal the health of a stream environment.

For more information on these events, call Lance Van Lenten on 781-545-5987 or visit the FHBWI website on www.fhbwi.org

Hart family finds summer program a breath of fresh air

Hosts a child from Bronx, N.Y.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For children growing up in Cohasset, playing outside is a way of life in the summer. Days are filled with swimming in the waves at the beach, riding bikes, and playing on the playgrounds, coming inside only when it gets dark. For Charnelle Wilson, that means soaking up every ounce of sunshine while she visits, because when she goes home again, Sandy Beach won't be just around the corner.

For the past two years, Seth and Eileen Hart, along with their four daughters, Torey, 13, Mackenzie, 11, Jacqueline, 7, and Audrey, 4, have been a host family for Charnelle, who lives in Bronx, N.Y. Through a program called the Fresh Air Fund — which matches up low-income New York City children with host families — the Harts are able to provide Charnelle with a respite from city life, and a free summer vacation.

Eileen said she first thought about becoming a part of the Fresh Air Fund just after September 11. Watching her girls set up lemonade stands in the neighborhood to raise money for the cause, she said she began to search for ideas as to how the family as a whole could contribute to the lives of others.

After reading about the Fresh Air Fund in the local newspaper, Eileen said she approached her husband Seth, with the idea of inviting a child who lives in the city, to spend a week or two with them in Cohasset during the summer. Seth joked that when Eileen first told him about her idea he said, "We need a fifth kid?" but both agreed it would be a wonderful learning experience for the entire family.

"It's good for the kids to see things beyond Cohasset. We're such a small town, and there is such a big world out there," Eileen said.

Charnelle has visited with the Harts for the past two summers, and during the time they have spent together, the girls have come to realize the kind of life they have is different from what Charnelle experiences living in the city, especially during the summer. Because Charnelle's mother is her sole caregiver, she has to work during the day, which means Charnelle stays at home with her babysitter. The Harts said Charnelle stays inside and watches television most of the time at her home because her neighborhood isn't that safe. While there is a playground three blocks away from her apartment, she said she never goes because it's in an area that is too dangerous.

However, when she's at the Harts, Charnelle almost never watches television. "There's so much here that you can do that's a ball," said Eileen, even if it's just being outside running around with their dog, Jingles.

Because the Hart's have four girls, there is always someone to play with, which Charnelle doesn't have at home, being an only child. "Charnelle loves Barbies," said Jacqueline, who added Charnelle always plays games and make-believe with her, as well as her younger sister Audrey. Seth said he was surprised at how well Charnelle played with all four girls, because he has assumed with the age difference, she would be more inclined to only want to hang out with the two older sisters.

When Charnelle first came to visit the Harts, Eileen said she was a little shy, which is expected. For an 11-year-old girl to pack up her things and get on a bus for an unknown destination to spend a vacation with a family she doesn't know is a very brave thing to do, she said. However, Eileen said Charnelle very quickly went from being a guest in the home to part of the family. Seth joked it's easy to tell when Charnelle has made the transition into being one of the girls when he can yell at all five of them at the same time. The second year she came to visit, Eileen said Charnelle warmed up almost immediately. Because Charnelle had spent summer vacations with two other families previously, Eileen said that second trip, Charnelle really knew the girls were not just a host family, but a group of friends who were very happy to see her.

Because it is an adjustment having someone new come into the home, the Harts said it is essential for any families considering becoming a part of the program, to have a family meeting first. "You can't have half the family committed to it," said Torey. Seth added, "It's like having a two-week sleepover," which is something everyone needs to discuss. Eileen said every day, each of her children essentially get one-quarter of her time, and it was important to have the conversation to decide whether they would be willing to give up a portion of her to Charnelle while she was visiting.

The Harts said they would advise anyone thinking about becoming a host family to "keep your own children doing their own thing," but make sure the additional child is incorporated into the family schedule. The Harts said last year, while their girls were at swimming lessons, they signed Charnelle up as well, which she absolutely loved. "She felt like she was a part of our routine and a part of the family," Eileen said.

While it is an additional responsibility with another child around, Eileen and Seth said having Charnelle as a part of their family during the summer is a great experience. Because Charnelle doesn't live in a rural area, Eileen said it is a wonderful feeling to see her face light up when they step onto the beach or see a friend riding a horse in the neighborhood, which are sights she doesn't normally see.

"We really feel good when it's all said and done," said Eileen, but acknowledges sending her back is always difficult, for many reasons. Now only do they miss her when she's gone, but they know where she's going can be a dangerous place. But above all, the Harts know she is returning to her home where a mom that loves her is waiting, and with that, they know she'll be OK. "She knows she can come back here again, and that's exciting and fun, but for her, it's only a vacation," Eileen said.

Madagascar enjoys its Golden moments

Cohasset native leaves stamp on the region

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While most teenagers spend their summers hanging out at the beach and working a part-time job, Chris Golden has spent more than one summer vacation living in the villages of Madagascar. While he may not have the comforts of home, including a solid roof over his head or a telephone, the contribution he is making is so worthwhile, it keeps him going back again and again.

"I really love being over there. It's incredibly different," said Golden, who grew up on Jerusalem Road with parents Amy and Steven.

"Ever since I was little, I've been interested in exotic wildlife," he said, adding when he began looking into wildlife programs he could participate in over the summer, going to Madagascar seemed to be the logical choice. "It is so far removed from westernization."

Golden is a 2001 graduate of Cohasset High School, and is currently in his junior year at Harvard. He has a long history of environmental studies behind him already, as he is a former recipient of the Henry David Thoreau scholarship, awarded for high school students who excel in environmental studies. During his summer breaks from both high school and college, he has conducted research in the northwest region of Madagascar, studying its wildlife and educating the people there about the importance of protecting the environment.

Through a program called Earthwatch, Golden spent the summer of 1999 conducting research on the carnivores of Madagascar. He worked under the direction of Luke Dollar, a researcher from Duke University. He mainly studied the fossa, an animal which resembles a puma, and is the largest carnivore on the island.

"It's considered threatened because it's so rare," he said, adding part of the research he conducted was to determine population size and density. Because there is very little information available on the animal, Golden's research is extremely helpful. With enough information, the fossa's status, currently unknown, could change to endangered, and measures could then be taken to help protect it.

However, to protect the fossa requires the help of the local people, which is why Golden's educational program is so important. During his second summer in Madagascar, Golden continued researching the fossa, but was also given permission to start his own environmental education program, providing the locals with the information they will need to keep their environment in pristine condition. Students in Golden's class ranged in age from 7-18 years old and were given a basic education in local environmental concerns.

While in Madagascar, Golden lived in a village called Ambodi Manga, but taught in the village of Andrano Fasika. While he knew his students wouldn't speak English, he had expected to be able to teach his lessons in French. However, upon arrival he learned there was not one student able to communicate in anything other than the native language, Malagasy, which put Golden to work right away.

"There's an incredibly friendly feeling as if I'm making an impact there."
— Chris Golden

Over a period of two-weeks, Golden immersed himself in the language. He became friends with the local children and they would take him around the village, pointing to objects and repeating its name in Malagasy. With his English to Malagasy dictionary always in tow, it didn't take him very long to learn the language well enough to be able to not only teach his students in a language they could understand, but write up the lesson plans as well.

"It's one of the more unique languages in the world," Golden said. He's comfortable speaking it now, but said it is unlike any other language he had heard before.

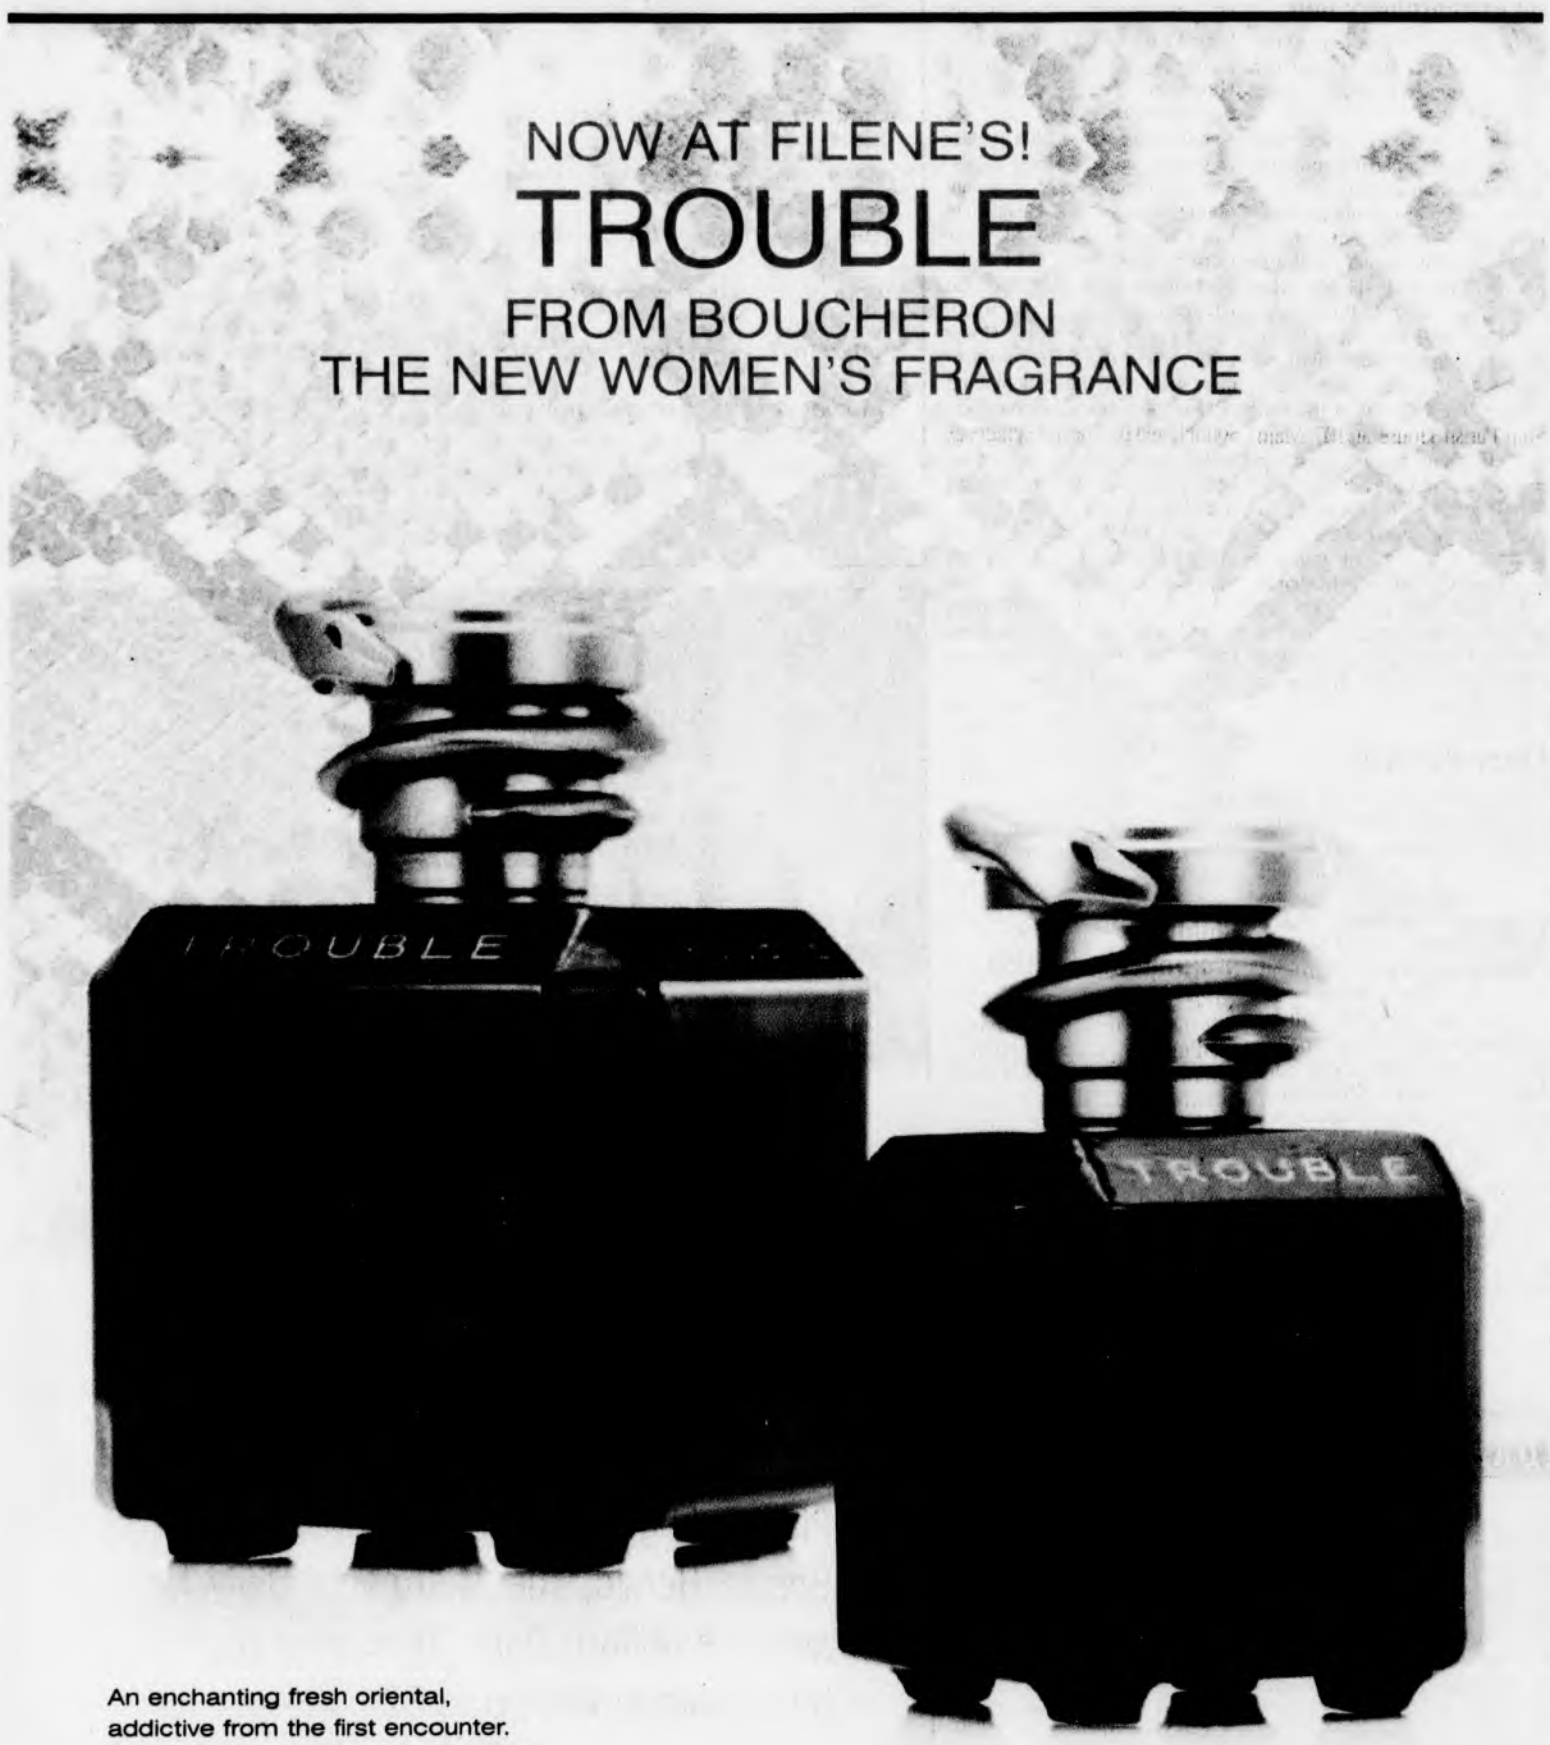
Golden's students were required to participate in his class for only three weeks, and after that, it was up to them whether they wanted to spend their summer vacation learning about their environment. However, Golden said he had a 95 percent perfect attendance record for the entire summer, due in part to the help of Cohasset graphics guru Ronnie Goodwin.

Goodwin made T-shirts imprinted with the fossa for all the students who participated in Golden's course. "If you didn't miss class you'd get a T-shirt," Golden said, which became a huge symbol in the village. Because it is a very poor area, it is unusual to get a new piece of clothing, and having a new T-shirt was a "big deal."

Golden said he tried to teach his students about the interconnectivity between humans and nature. He said the younger students loved a book he wrote for them in Malagasy, adapted from a book he had read called "The Great Kapok Tree," by Lynne Cherry. The original story is about a man who travels into the Amazon rainforest to cut down the great tree, and falls asleep from his efforts. While he is dreaming, creatures from the forest visit him to show him the importance of that one tree on the whole rainforest environment. Throughout the story, the phrase, "O Senhor," is repeated each time the animals approach the man to tell him to think twice about what he is going to do, and Golden repeated the Malagasy words, "O Ranka," in his version. Golden knew his story had really struck a chord with his students when they were walking one day and saw a man cutting down a tree and they all turned to him and said, "O Ranka."

Golden said when he was teaching, his students would pay very close attention. He attributed their interest to the fact that the educational system in Madasgar is not very advanced, and being taught an interactive lesson, which is typical in the United States, is new and exciting. In addition, as a white foreigner, Golden was interesting all by himself. "I've never had such a captive audience," he said.

By far, Golden said the best aspect of Madagascar is the people. "There's an incredibly friendly feeling as if I'm making an impact there." He said he became friends with many of his students and he hears from them every month.



Golden said he will return to Madagascar this summer to conduct more research with the Wildlife Conservation Society for his college thesis. Harvard has also hired a professor for the sole purpose of allowing Golden to continue in his study of Malagasy.

Coffeehouse hosts an extraordinary duo

Hingham's Coffeehouse off the Square presents Susie Burke and David Surrette on Saturday, April 17, at 8 p.m.

Burke's complex voice and Surrette's string playing combine with extraordinary results.

They use their talents to interpret their own songs and some of the finest contemporary and traditional material. Those who have heard their last two outstanding performances know what to expect; others will be pleasantly surprised.

The Coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Parish House at 107 Main St., Hingham Square, just up from the Loring Hall Theatre. Admission is $10 at the door. An open microphone precedes the concert. A variety of coffees, teas, and desserts are available for 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee. For further information, call Jim Watson at (781) 749-1767.

Abbey plant sale

The Glastonbury Abbey Plant sale will be held from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Saturday, May 8.

A large selection of plants will be available for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Rt. 28) in Hingham.

Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses, bushes, fruits and vegetables will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local private gardens in the South Shore area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in Abbey gardens. Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who attend the sale. Proceeds go to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue beautification of the Abbey Grounds.

Alzheimer's support meets on April 28

The Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. will feature Carolyn Housman, LICSW, on "Communicating with Health Care Providers" on Wednesday, April 28, at 7:30 p.m., at the Hingham Senior Center, 224 Central St., Hingham.

Housman is a specialist in elder care and care-partnering issues. She is currently associated with South Shore Mental Health and has a private practice. She was formerly director of the Alzheimer program for the Hingham Affiliated Community Visiting Nurses/Partners Home Care. She will discuss how to best speak for the patient with physicians, nursing home personnel, and day health centers as well as communicating the patient's needs to family and friends.

As the care-partner is often intermediary between patient and others, knowing what questions to ask and what information should be shared is most important. A question and answer time will conclude her program.

This meeting is free and open to the public. For more information call Toni Abbott at 781-749-1823 or JoAnn Mitchell at 781-749-5417. In the event of inclement weather , meeting cancellations will be aired on WJDA 1300AM.

Children's summer program registration

The Trustees of Reservations will be having a registration evening for their Children's Summer Programs in the Whiton Room at the Hingham Public Library between 6 and 8:30 p.m., Tuesday, April 13. This will be the first opportunity to register your child for the popular "Farm Hands" or "Young Ecologists" at Weir River Farm and World's End. For more information or to register after that date call 781-740-4796.

Great Vigil of Easter at St. Stephen's

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., will celebrate the Great Vigil of Easter, a candlelight service on Saturday, April 10, at 7 p.m. with baptisms and first communion. The worship is dramatic, beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when resurrection is proclaimed the lights are turned on signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that no amount of darkness can overcome.

Worship Easter morning, Sunday, April 11, will be at 8 a.m. with quartet and brass and 10 a.m. with full choir and brass. This worship finds women, followers of Jesus, at the empty tomb enjoined to "Go and tell" Christ is risen. Both services, Eucharist with sermon, will be in the church.

Prior to Easter, there will be worship in the church on Maundy Thursday, April 8, at 7 p.m. This Eucharist commemorates the last supper and the importance of community for the church's life together in Christ. Following the Eucharist will be a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time - breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits and milk and honey.

A 24 Prayer Watch will begin on Maundy Thursday at 3 p.m. Parishioners sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet, or meditate. It recalls Jesus' words at Gethsemane, "So, could you not watch with me one hour?" and the words of Psalm 130: "my soul waits for the LORD more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." It is a powerful experience of prayer each minute throughout the day bringing the church into Good Friday.

Good Friday worship begins at noon on April 9, with an hour of quiet. The Prayer Book liturgy begins at I p.m. A service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross. A number of parishioners will participate in the 20 mile Good Friday walk raising money to assist economically poor areas of the south, particularly in rural Mississippi.

Faith based courses at St. Stephen's Church

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church is announcing a new contemporary series of faith-based courses starting Wednesday, April 21, at 7 p.m. In recent months, the Episcopal Church has been making headlines globally and locally.

In response to the attention, St. Stephen's is offering a series of eight Christian education courses called Via Media. The program is focused on continuing the conversation, and it's open to anyone who has ever been curios or interested in the Episcopal/Anglican tradition. It's objective is to create an open and inclusive environment that appeals to people wondering about The Episcopal Church or St. Stephen's as well as our existing congregation members. St. Stephen's encourages people to bring their ideas and questions, and the church will provide the informational resources and a place to exchange your thoughts and voice your opinions.

Over a period of eight weeks, St. Stephen's invites those seeking a spiritual community to enter both the journey and the conversation. Each week will begin with dinner at 7 p.m. and will be followed by a short video. Small and large group discussions will allow us to share our thoughts, reactions and questions to the topics presented in the video.

Using this combination of learning styles, St. Stephen's will encounter the basic principles of Christianity through the Anglican approach of Scripture, Tradition, and Reason. All people are encouraged to ask questions, and to learn how to answer their own questions of faith.

This program is open to the public and is free. St. Stephen's hopes you will consider coming for dinner and conversation. To register, contact St. Stephen's at 781-383-1083 no later than April 16.

Abbey speaker on global justice

Woodard is a founding member of CDCA along with the other members of the Jubilee House Community, a non-sectarian group committed to global justice through the development of micro-loan projects and worker-owned crafts and agricultural coops.

Reservations are necessary. $10 to cover cost of food at both events. A selection of crafts will be available for sale. For reservations and information call Carol Stanton at 781-749-2155x 243. Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center is located on Rte. 228 (Hull St.) Hingham www.glastonburyabbey.org

OBITUARY

Eileen W. Foster

Eileen W. Foster, '71, of Westbrook, Maine, died unexpectedly on April 4, 2004, at her residence.

She was born and raised in Carnegie, Pa., the daughter of Howard and EllaMae Schaffer Wright.

Mrs. Foster attended schools in Carnegie where upon graduation, she worked for an engineering firm. There she met and married Andrew L. Foster. They were married for almost 50 years until Mr. Foster's death in June of 2002.

In 1965 they moved their family from Pennsylvania to Cohasset, where they resided and raised their two daughters until Mr. Foster's death.

Mrs. Foster was a devoted homemaker. She took great pride in raising her family. Upon her daughters' graduation, she pursued a career with Roman Research where she held a managerial position. After retirement, she spent time traveling with her husband to foreign countries he had business associations with.

She was a loving and dedicated wife and mother and cheerful and pleasing grandmother.

Very important to Mrs. Foster was her involvement with St. Stephen's Church. When she moved to Maine, her most important correspondence was the newsletters she received from St. Stephen's. There she was involved in the Alter Guild, was an assistant treasurer to the church, and a member of the soup and sandwich program.

Mrs. Foster leaves her two daughters, Cheryl L. Bifulco and Melissa J. Schinner and their husbands, her eight grandchildren, Eileen Marie, Antonio, Andrew, and Alexandra Bifulco, Nicholas and Jordan Hiltz, Adam and Lauren Schinner.

A private graveside ceremony will be held on April 12, at noon to be followed by a memorial service at St. Stephen's Church at 1 p.m.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be sent to St. Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, 02025.

Legendary funnyman Rich Little will bring his vast collection of celebrity voices to Plymouth Memorial Hall on Saturday, April 17, at 7:30 p.m., in a night featuring music and comedy. This veteran performer has a catalog of more than 1,000 celebrity voices, from Jimmy Stewart, to George Bush to Kermit the Frog. Little will be backed by a band which will assist him on such musical impersonations as Frank Sinatra and Tony Bennett.

Tickets priced at $40 and $35 are now available at the Plymouth Hall box-office, located in the lobby of the Radisson Plymouth Hotel (180 Water St.), online at www.ticketweb.com and by calling 508-747-0234. You can also get tickets at all Strawberries outlets.

The Pembroke Historical Society will be hosting their annual Grand Ol' Fish Fry on Sunday, May 2, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Thomas Reading Park at the Herring Run. This very popular family event will once again feature the culinary expertise of Chef Bobby Hackett who will be serving up the fish, cornbread, beans, coffee, and lemonade. Hot Dogs will be available for those non-fish friendly taste buds. Chef Hackett will be christening the new grill at the park that has been painstakingly renovated thanks to community donations and volunteers, coordinated by the Pembroke Historical Society.

The second annual Golf For a Hope golf tournament to benefit the Friends for Life Fund at Dana Farber is scheduled to be held at Atlantic Country Club in Plymouth on May 21, is one of the more than 150 tournaments being held in 2004. The funds raised will help the Friends for Life people reach their goal of $1,000,000. Denyse Dodd 617-872-6020 denysed@myfriendsforlife.com

The Scituate Animal Shelter will hold its First Annual Golf Tournament on Friday, June 4, at Widow's Walk Golf Course in Scituate. The afternoon tournament will feature numerous prizes - including a hole-in-one automobile, raffles, and Par 3 Poker. The $125 fee includes 18 holes of golf, cart, and dinner at the Barker Tavern. The Shelter is also seeking corporate sponsorships and donations to raffle. All proceeds will go to the no-kill Scituate Animal Shelter. Registration forms are available at the shelter or by logging onto Fundraisers at www.town.scituate.ma.us/animal-shelter/. For information, call 781-545-8325.

Billy Joel musical is 'Movin' Out' this weekend

If you like the idea of a 16-member company of Broadway's most-talented dancers moving to the music of Billy Joel with stunning choreography by Twyla Tharp, then "Movin' Out" belongs at the top of your must-see list. Don't waste too much of this week coloring Easter eggs, however, as the national tour of the 2003 Tony Award-winning show will only be in town through Saturday, April 10.

Conceived, choreographed and directed by contemporary dance icon Tharp and based on 26 classic songs by rock legend Joel, "Movin' Out" tells the tale of lifelong friends through two turbulent decades that change their lives and the world they live in forever. Songs like "It's Still Rock and Roll to Me," "We Didn't Start the Fire" and "Scenes from an Italian Restaurant" come together perfectly to weave a compelling story told through music and passionate, energy-infused dance.

"Movin' Out" will be at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston Street, Boston, through April 10. For tickets, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.ticketmaster.com

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
DON'T DELAY
Parents who suspect that their children may have hearing or speech problems should not delay in getting a professional assessment as soon as possible. When a child seems to be slow to develop speech and language skills, parents may be tempted to think that he or she will outgrow it. This delay may lead a child to experience needless barriers to social interaction and emotional well-being at a very early age and place him or her at an academic disadvantage. Early intervention, therefore, is key. An estimated eighty-three out of every one thousand children in the United States have an educationally significant hearing loss. Without adequate treatment, they are at risk for a lifetime of educational, emotional, and social problems.
Communication is a vital part of our world no matter what our age. And at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we'll do all we can to ensure that the isolation of a hearing impairment doesn't keep you or your child on the outside looking in. We'll start with a comprehensive hearing test to determine the best course of action. If a hearing impairment is detected, we'll use all our knowledge and experience to match the correct instrument to your needs. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.
P.S. If a child experiences difficulty in pre-school or kindergarten with following directions or taking part in activities with other children, he or she may have a hearing problem.

Setback doesn't deter Cook plans

Septic system poses unexpected challenge

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While plans to incorporate an on-site septic system for the senior housing complex planned for the Cook property appear to be off the table, Town Manager Mark Haddad said it will not affect the project's ability to move forward.

The town has been conducting "due diligence" on the property and results of some preliminary testing have shown the on-site system the town had planned will not be feasible, Haddad said, so alternative solutions are being explored.

A potential solution could be to build a treatment plant on-site and discharge the water to a leaching field on another piece of property, Haddad said. Both town-owned property and private property will be looked at as possible locations, but Haddad would not say specifically which land is being considered. Because abutting properties to the Cook estate could have the same soil conditions, they are not being thought about as viable alternatives, he said. The stretch of town-owned land that runs from behind the new Osgood School to behind the old Osgood School is recreation and conservation land, and he doesn't see it as a viable site, either, he added.

Last fall, voters at the Special Town meeting allocated $4.5 million for the purchase of the 22-acre parcel of Cook-owned property, which has been combined with the adjacent 8.7 acres

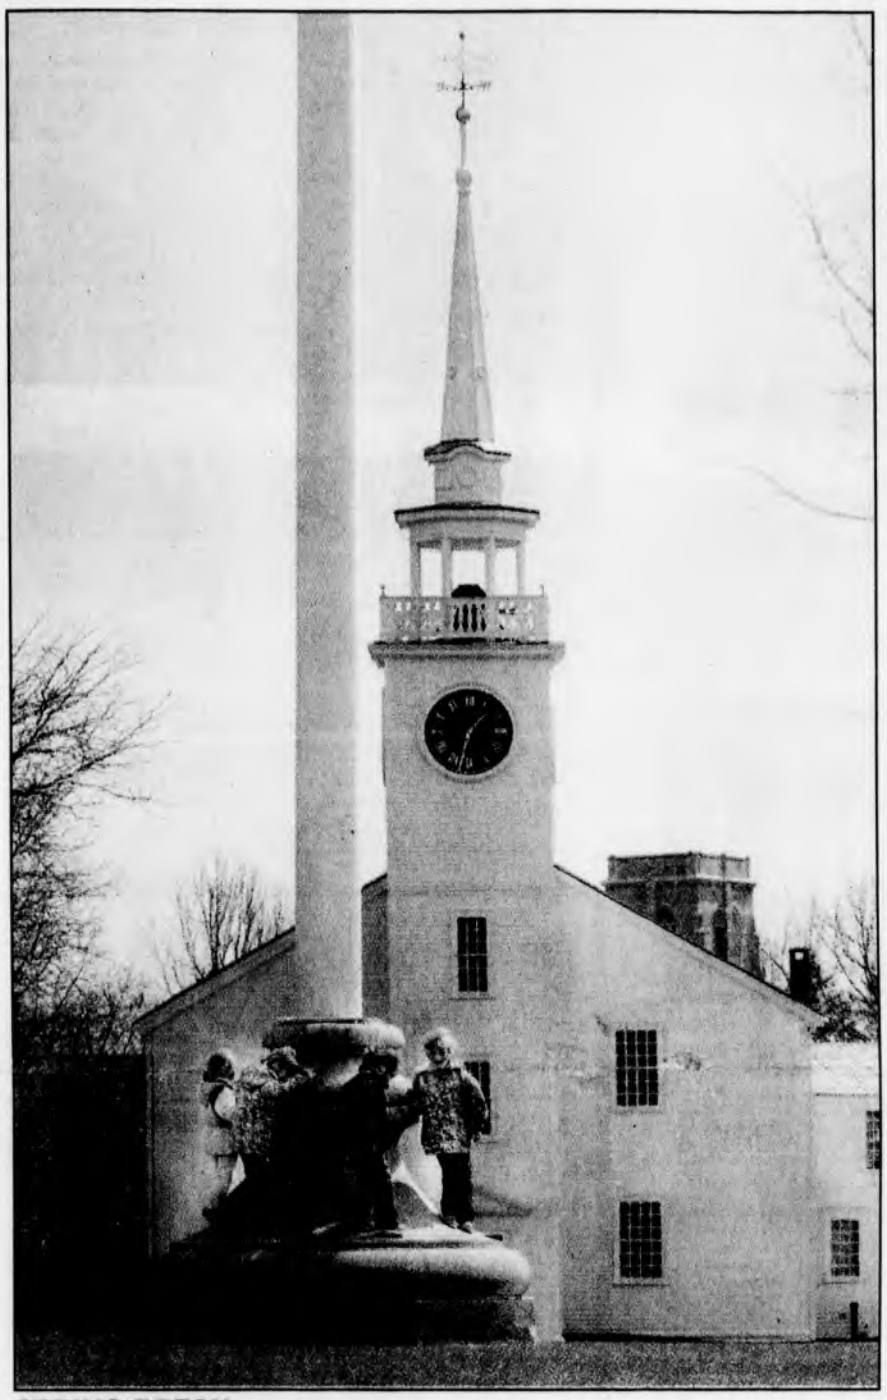
Selectmen's race expensive contest

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Newly elected Selectman Rob Spofford may turn out to be the single-biggest spender and fundraiser during this year's town election season.

Under state law, candidates are required to file preliminary campaign finance reports with the Town Clerk eight days before the election.



According to Spofford's report, from Jan. 9 to March 25 he raised $8,339.43 and spent $5,690.96. Ralph Dormitzer, who finished second just 75 votes behind Spofford, reported raising $3,910 from Feb. 19-March 26 and spending $2,798. Lou Harvey reported raising $4,405 and spending $2,553.34 during essentially the same timeframe as Dormitzer.

Dormitzer and Harvey, who ran as a team, pulled nomination papers just a few days before the Feb. 17 filing deadline. When looked at together, the men raised $8,315 and spent $5,351.14.

Incumbent Selectman Merle Brown, who finished fourth in the four-way race for two seats, reported $308 in receipts for his campaign and expenditures of $315.36.

In the four-way school committee race for two seats, top vote-getter Jamie Williams reported raising $2,190 and spending $745.42 from Dec. 14 through March 11. Adrienne Brick for the village?

Dormitzer says downtown plans need tweaking

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With an April 30 deadline to submit bids on the Village Revitalization Project looming, newly elected Selectman Ralph Dormitzer is wasting no time in trying to change the project's direction.

Dormitzer said he believes there are some aspects of the current plans, drawn by the Waterfield Design Group, which need to be looked into before anything becomes finalized. To that end, he is working with the Planning Board, which has similar concerns, to assemble a task force of Cohasset professionals and merchants, who were slated to meet last night (Wednesday, April 14) after the Mariner went to press with selectmen, to discuss alternatives to current streetscape plans.

"We are a historic town and we want it to stay that way," said Dormitzer, adding he believes new sidewalks, new curbs, and generally, "cleaning the Village up a bit," is what people want to see.

He added current plans for sidewalk materials, lighting, and parking could be improved to keep with the character of the town. While he acknowledges the town voted in favor of concrete sidewalks at the fall Special Town Meeting, he said it was a vote on a concept and not the actual plans.

The November Special Town Meeting first voted down an arti-

New office building planned for Rte. 3A

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If all goes as planned a third, brick office building will rise off Route 3A near Crocker Lane, not far from the proposed Cohasset Greenbush station.

The proposed 4,400 square-foot building is slated for the 2.6-acre site where the candy store, "Sweet Surprises," is now located next to Cohasset Collision. Plans are to raze the small Cape-style house and replace it with a new office building.

Engineer John Cavanaro presented preliminary plans for the building to the Planning Board last week. The property is owned by Crocker II Realty Trust, which also owns the Brass Kettle Brook office building and the medical building off Crocker Lane. Cavanaro said the new building, which is on an odd-shaped lot that lacks enough space for adequate parking, would use some of the excess parking at the medical building that has 221 spaces and needs 197.

The proposed 4,400 square-foot building is slated for the 2.6-acre site where the candy store, "Sweet Surprises," is now located.

Shared parking is OK under Cohasset bylaws if the adjacent parcels have the same owner and the parking area is within reasonable walking distance, Cavanaro explained. The proposed building would need 34 spaces and 10 are proposed on site, the remainder would be at the medical center.

The building is colonial style on a 2,500-square-foot footprint and would connect to the existing leaching field between Cohasset Collision and Hingham

Great Neck project misses PB hearing

Members of the Great Neck development team did not show up for a public hearing with the Planning Board last week. Town Planner Liz Harrington said she had made calls and sent letters to property owner Ellen Morrissey, to inform her of the importance of the hearing.

Morrissey and her team were given a second chance to present plans before the board, even though it voted unanimously in February to deny her proposal for the Great Neck senior housing project, slated to be built off of Beach Street. The board said the preliminary plans were not sufficient to move forward, but due to Planning Board rules and regulations, the team was given a second opportunity to present any changes they had made.

Because the applicants did not show up, their plans were denied. Mark DeGiacomo, 59 Beach St., asked whether the applicant's denial means she cannot come back before the Planning Board. He said as he reads the Senior Multi-family Overlay District bylaw, which the project was filed under, once a project is denied, it cannot come before the board again. Town Planner Liz Harrington said while applicants for regular special permits are usually allowed to come back after two years, because the SMROD bylaw is so new, rules for re-applying will need to be looked into.

Openings on school facilities committee

David Chase and Rob Spofford are both resigning from the School Building Committee, soon to be known as the School Facilities Committee now that construction is complete, leaving three openings on the board. Spofford who is now serving on the board of selectmen, said one of the main duties of the board is to report to Town Meeting annually to give reports on the status of the schools.

With the end of construction, there was talk among selectmen to possibly expand the responsibility of the board to include overseeing some of the renovated buildings in town like the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. If the scope of the board is changed, it will need to come in the form of a Town Meeting vote.

For more information, please contact the board of selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

DPW calls the shots on the fields

Town Manager Mark Haddad said either Andy Swanson or Carl Sestito of the DPW will be the authority on playing fields in Cohasset. If a field is too wet or not in any condition to be played on, one of them will make that decision. With all the improvements that have been made to the fields, selectmen wanted to make sure someone has the authority to call off a game, should it become necessary, in an effort to protect the town's investment.

P&B bus stop could be removed

Roger Hill, 19 Highland Ave., said there is an old bus stop "hut" on North Main Street, which is in disrepair and should be taken down. "We don't even have a P&B bus running through town anymore," he said, and wondered if the area could be replaced with grass instead. He also mentioned there is some artwork inside the hut which local residents might want saved, and should be taken into consideration if it is taken down. Selectmen said they would look into the matter.

Roundhouse and Rocky Lane focus of MBTA meeting

The MBTA will conduct a meeting regarding the old Cohasset Roundhouse and Rocky Lane grade separator at 10 a.m., Wednesday, April 28 in the basement meeting room at Town Hall.

The purpose of the consultation sessions will be for the MBTA to present the current design proposals for these components of the project and discuss their potential impacts to cultural resources. Representatives of the towns as well as members of the public will then be given an opportunity to make comments on the design as proposed.

Service provider for sewer backups

There has been a change of service to all customers with grinder pumps, previously if you had an alarm or sewer backup Rosano-Davis would be the service provider to call. Recently the Town has changed contractors. Now all Sewer Customers must call either the Wastewater Treatment Plant at 781-383-1519 or Williamson Electric at: 800-287-9000 or 617-394-5060.

As previously advised before, it is necessary for the Commission to back charge its sewer customers for the town's cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls. Please discontinue the introduction of the following items into the Sewer System: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary napkins, shells, towels.

Straits Pond Assoc. to meet on April 26

The Straits Pond Watershed Association will holds its quarterly meeting at 7:30 p.m., Monday, April 26 at Rob & Betsy Gilman's house, 15 Summit Ave., Hull. Staszko floats plans for new Mill River Marine site

Existing businesses are being evicted

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Tommy Alioto has been running Cohasset Lobster Pound for 14 years, but will soon need to find another place to operate. His is among the businesses being evicted from the Mill River Marine at the harbor.

"I buy lobsters from 30 boats," he said, adding his business is convenient for him and the lobstermen, since it provides an easy drop-off point as they come into the harbor, and also provides a service to the town. But with new plans to rebuild three dilapidated buildings in the Mill River Marine, he and others are being asked to evacuate in order to make room for what will come, and will not be asked to return once construction is complete.

Representatives for Donald Staszko, owner of the Mill River Marine, came before the planning board last Wednesday with a vision of rebuilding the Quonset hut, "Eastwick" building, and main building at the Border Street site.

The development team said its intention is to essentially rebuild what is currently there, to minimize the impact on the surrounding area. But Alioto sees it differently.

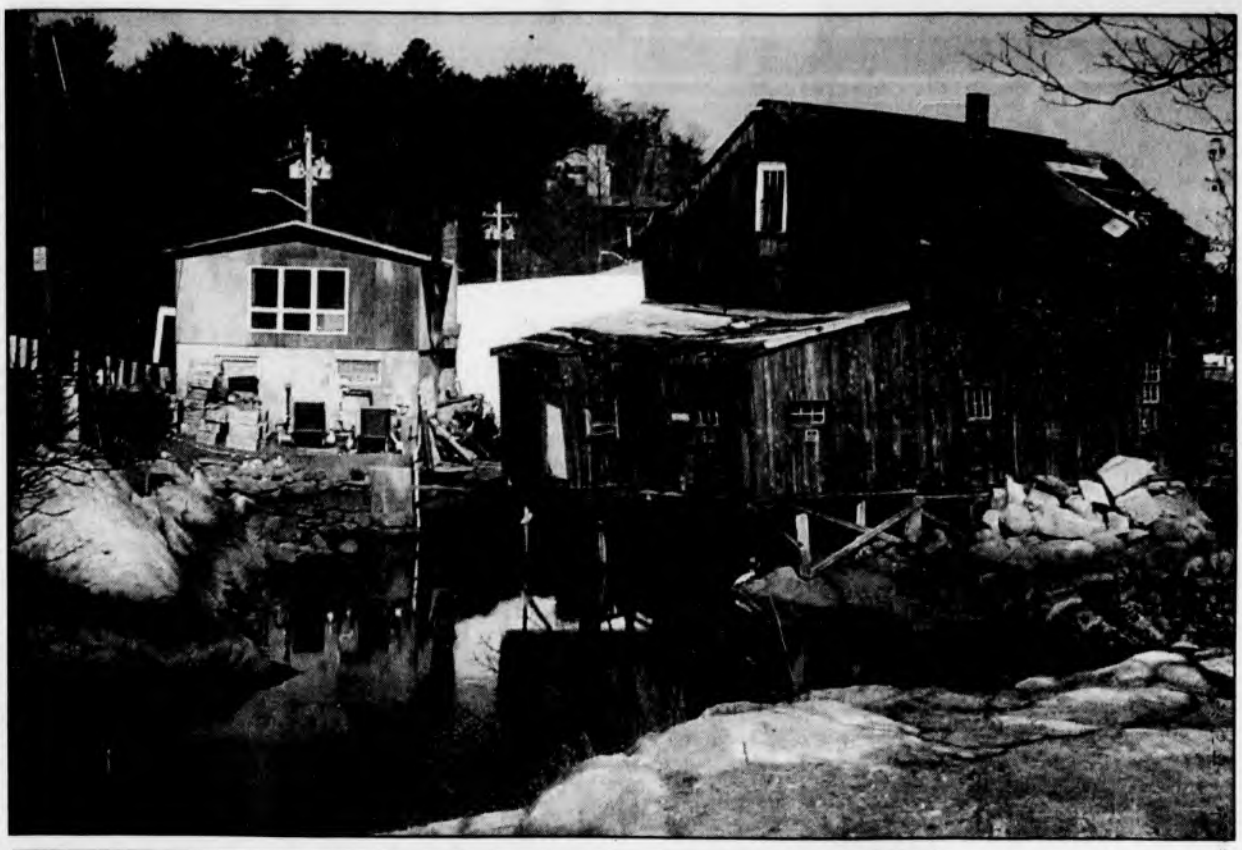
"I'm going to have to sell lobsters somewhere else," he said, adding he will most likely move his business to Hull.

With the amount of time he has been operating his business, he said he has built up relationships with the lobstermen, who will now either have to travel to sell their lobsters to him, or sell them someplace else. Alioto added lobsters are only worth something if they're alive, and traveling with them doesn't help.

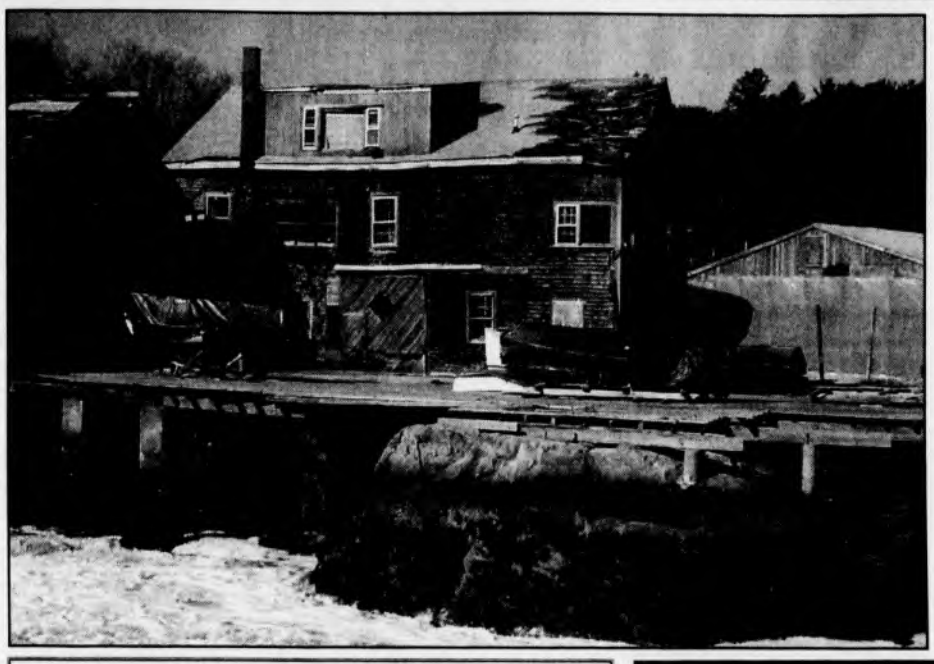
But even with plans to evict current tenants, the developers have been vague about plans for businesses in the marina. Planning board Chairman Al Moore said, "It's not our prerogative to ask, but our presumption is, it's being built for the use it is intended to be built for." Just last year, Peter Roy had plans to build two condominiums on site, but was not given approval because of the waterfront zoning. Moore said waterfront uses are very limited and even offices which deal with the sale of boats don't necessarily qualify.

While the development team will come before the planning board again April 21 to describe its plans in more detail, current proposals include the reconstruction of the "three failed buildings," said Charles Humphreys, Donald Staszko's attorney, who also served as Roy's attorney when he owned the site. "Our intent is to repair and rebuild the same buildings without substantial impact," he said.

Carlos Peña, vice president of CLE Engineering — who was hired for the project — said improvements such as raising the buildings to the 100-year flood plain would need to be made, requiring the Eastwick building be raised between two and three feet.



Moore asked about what the demolition process will entail, since the buildings are literally right on the water, the environment is a major concern.



"Most of the work is being done on ledge," said Peña, who added before anything begins on site, the project will have to come before the conservation commission. He said he has already contacted a company which specializes in dismantling buildings because the typical demolition process of knocking down a building to a pile of rubble will obviously not work.

Because a marine railway will most likely be removed, measures will have to be taken to ensure the project meets the guidelines of the Chapter 91 Waterways law, also called the Massachusetts Public Waterfront Act.

The town's engineering consultant, John Modzelewski, said the next time the team comes before the board, he would like to see plans which show what is currently on site versus what is planned, to give a better idea of what the project will entail. In the meantime, Alioto said he will have until Sept. 1 to pack up and move.

The Mill River Marine project will come before the Planning Board again Wednesday, April 21, at Cohasset Town Hall.

of town property, and marketed to developers. The town will sell the combined parcels to Northland Residential for $5.425 million for senior housing. There will be a double closing, transferring the property from the Cooks to the developer, and therefore money will not be expended by the town. Because the town has a closing deadline of October, time is of the essence.

Should the town opt to lend town land to the cause, the developers would have to enter into some kind of leasing or licensing agreement. "To be smart about it, you'd want to go to Town Meeting," said Haddad, but ultimately that decision will be up to the selectmen. Haddad said he believes the board can enter into leasing agreements for up to 10 years without having to go before Town Meeting.

Joe Cerutti, the hydrogeologist appointed by the state Department of Environmental Protection for the project, said rights to property can be leased to accommodate wastewater disposal. Cerutti said the DEP would allow it "as long as we were confident it would be feasible."

While a mounded system had also been considered, Haddad said the size of the system would be too large to be accommodated without virtually creating a mountain on-site. He also said tying into town sewer will be considered as an alternative, but because there are currently many issues surrounding sewer tie-ins and available capacity, that option may not prove to be feasible. "That's not something we're pursuing right now," he said of sewer hook up.

Perc tests

Preliminary perc tests on the property were promising and indicated the soil could accommodate a conventional Title 5 system (the state code governing septic systems). John Cavanaro of John Cavanaro Consulting said there was one area of the site which had successful perc rates, and showed no imminent threats, such as bedrock or a high water table, which would indicate testing should not move any further. "We found we had successful perc rates to do a conventional Title 5 system," on that area of the site, Cavanaro said. The area they had successful rates in was in the least sensitive area on site as well. "It made sense to keep moving forward," he said.

Haddad said based on Cavanaro's results, "If we needed anything under 10,000 gallons per day, we could put a conventional system on-site right now."

To keep the process moving forward, voters allocated $25,000 at the special Fall Town Meeting for a hydrogeologic study, which is the first step in obtaining a ground-water discharge permit from DEP. The project is estimated to generate 14,000 gallons of wastewater per day.

When the town was given the OK from DEP to begin a hydrogeologic study, the town hired John Chessia of Coler and Colantonio with an additional $25,000 allocated from a reserve fund transfer. Because the town has a deadline it needs to meet, Chessia set up a meeting with DEP, which appointed a hydrogeologist to work with him, and set up a schedule.

Chessia began his work by conducting soil borings and monitoring wells. During soil borings, a four-inch metal pipe is drilled into the ground, taking soil samples along the way, and soil conditions can be monitored as the depth increases. "It allows you to see the soil at depth, without digging," Chessia said. Monitoring wells allow data to be collected on groundwater.

When the soil from the borings was inspected, Chessia said the topsoil was permeable, but as the depth increased, it became less permeable. While the soil did regain some permeability as the depth increased further, the middle region did not have favorable conditions.

Chessia said their findings were quickly reported to DEP to allow time to talk about the results and decide on their options. He said in the interest of time, his team has been reporting back to DEP each step of the way. From the feedback he has received, Chessia said it appears the area where the on-site system was to be installed was not a good area after all.

Chessia the town has not officially filed for a groundwater discharge permit.

"This was not a good spot to do what we wanted," he said. "It doesn't mean everything's dead, that's not necessarily the case. We'll just need to explore other options. It's a setback, but it's not the end of the world."

While there may be other suitable areas for an on-site system, Chessia said there is really no way to ever find out without digging up every square foot of land, which no one is going to do. "All indications are, we tried the best spot and it didn't work there."

Haddad said even though the soils aren't as good as the town had hoped, that doesn't mean the project can't move forward. "Northland is committed to the project and the Town of Cohasset is committed to the project," he said.

Jack Dawley of Northland Residential said he expects the issue of wastewater disposal to be resolved. "We're exploring a number of different alternates with the town," he said. "We have every intention of moving forward and fully expect that this will be resolved in a manner that is satisfactory for all involved."

Haddad said the town will try to negotiate for more time with the Cook heirs if necessary. "The sky is not falling," he said.

In a related development, the site passed the 21E environmental assessment. No problems with contamination were found and the site history, site reconnaissance and review of the municipal and state files pertaining to the site and surrounding areas came back clean as well.

What will it all cost?

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When voters allocated $4.5 million dollars at the fall Special Town Meeting last November, it gave town officials the OK to begin working toward building senior housing on the Cook Estate site.

Since then, the town has spent $79,448 on the project, which includes work done by Coler and Colantonio, GLC, Cavanaro Consulting, and Thomas Mulhearn, who conducted the original appraisal for the property.

On July 17, 2003, Haddad said he came before the advisory committee to ask for a $25,000 reserve fund transfer to pay for the work done by Cavanaro. At the fall Special Town Meeting, that $25,000 was put back into the reserve fund, and an additional $25,000 was transferred from free cash into the Selectmen's budget to cover additional expenses. Another $25,000 was transferred from the reserve fund again on Jan. 8, 2004 to pay for services done by Coler and Colantonio. Services rendered by Mulhearn total around $4,200. Haddad said those costs are a small price to pay for the roughly $900,000 the town will receive at the closing.

Because the town will pay $4.5 million to the Cooks for its property and will sell both the Cook Property with its adjacent parcel of land to Northland Residential for $5.425 million at a simultaneous closing, there will be no money expended by the town, and it will walk away with a profit of $925,000.

The town has also put $200,000 into the project, which is the only money that has been used from the $4.5 million allocated at the fall Special Town Meeting for the purchase of the land. The developer has put $100,000 into an escrow account for the town, which the town will receive along with the other $100,000 once successful negotiations of the land disposition agreement have been completed, which Haddad expects will be in another week or two. "If it all falls apart, the $200,000 deposit is refundable," for both sides said Haddad, and the town as well as Northland will not lose any money.

In the case the project needs to run pipes from an on-site treatment facility to another parcel of land designated as a leaching field, that cost will fall into the hands of the developer, Haddad said. Northland would be responsible for digging up the streets, laying the pipes, blasting ledge if necessary, and any other costs incurred to make wastewater drainage possible off site. "That's what I'd propose," Haddad said.

Re-routing wastewater off site was not a part of the RFP, and not what Northland bid on. Haddad said he wasn't sure what the estimated cost might be to have wastewater re-routed off site, and said if it was a cost Northland didn't want to pay for, he would imagine they would pull out of the deal.

Design group left out of meeting

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The group hired to design the Village Revitalization project weren't expected to participate in a meeting this week to discuss possible streetscape changes to the plan.

Selectmen and the planning board were meeting last night after the Mariner's deadline to discuss any changes, but did not feel the need to invite members of the Waterfield Design Group, who have been hired by the town to design the project.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen this week to make any changes they want, but just make sure the June 30, 2005 deadline still applies and that the project stays within its budget. However, Selectman Rob Spofford said where the bids have already been taken out for the project, with the specifications currently drafted, any changes made by the board will result in change orders. That, he said, will raise the cost of the project once more.

There has been a total of $150,000 spent on design costs to date.

In preparation for the meeting, Haddad presented a list of comments submitted by the planning board's consultant John Modzelewski to members of the board of selectmen Tuesday, which includes comments from the Waterfield Design Group. Haddad said he wanted to make sure members had all the information necessary to make informed decisions prior to the meeting.

One of the main concerns Modzelewski and the planning board have with the plans are the problems with the parking spaces. They say the zoning bylaws for the town require parking spaces of a different size from what is shown on the plans. Comments from Waterfield say the selectmen directed them to compromise on the size of the parking spaces, which are both 8.5 feet and 9 feet, in order to maximize the number of spaces. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who is organizing the meeting, said currently there are 20 spaces and plans currently show 19.

Modzelewski also suggested changing the angle of the parking downtown, as what is proposed will cause problems for some of the larger vehicles in town. Waterfield says changing the angle of the parking will result in a loss of parking spaces.

Comments regarding landscaping measures and drainage were addressed as well, and many of Waterfield's responses say it made certain choices because that is what it was directed to do.

One of the last inquiries made by Modzelewski was whether the group could review the proposed color of the concrete sidewalk. Waterfield answered, "No comment."

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said it always takes until the 11th hour for people to become motivated to act on their concerns, and with a project of this size, every detail should be scrutinized. "There are people who want to take another look at it," he said, and thinks the discussion is warranted.

Brick village sidewalks could make comeback

cle to bury utility wires downtown — knowing if the wires were not buried — it would free up money to be spent on streetscape materials. When it was decided the utility poles would stay, voters decided on the type of sidewalks. Brick, the more expensive option, could be chosen only if the wires were not buried, because the town did not have the money available in the budget to cover both. Selectman Ronnie McMorris told voters if concrete sidewalks were installed the town could afford to extend the sidewalks down Ripley Road.

Dormitzer explained the streetscape article asked voters to "approve a concept for improvements to the sidewalks and streets." He said because it was a concept, the town was really voting on the amount of money it would like to see spent.

Dormitzer said concrete will deteriorate over time. He said brick or an alternate paving material, which may cost a little more, will be better for the town in the long run. If necessary, the town could cut back on the scope of the sidewalk project to make up the difference.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore and member Robert Sturdy agreed. "I don't think anyone was in love with the concrete," Moore said.

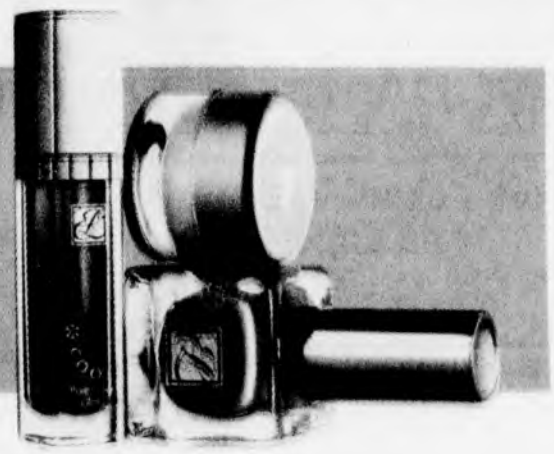
"We're spending a million and a half (dollars) downtown for something that won't look much different and will give us less parking. We'll have gained virtually nothing," Sturdy said.

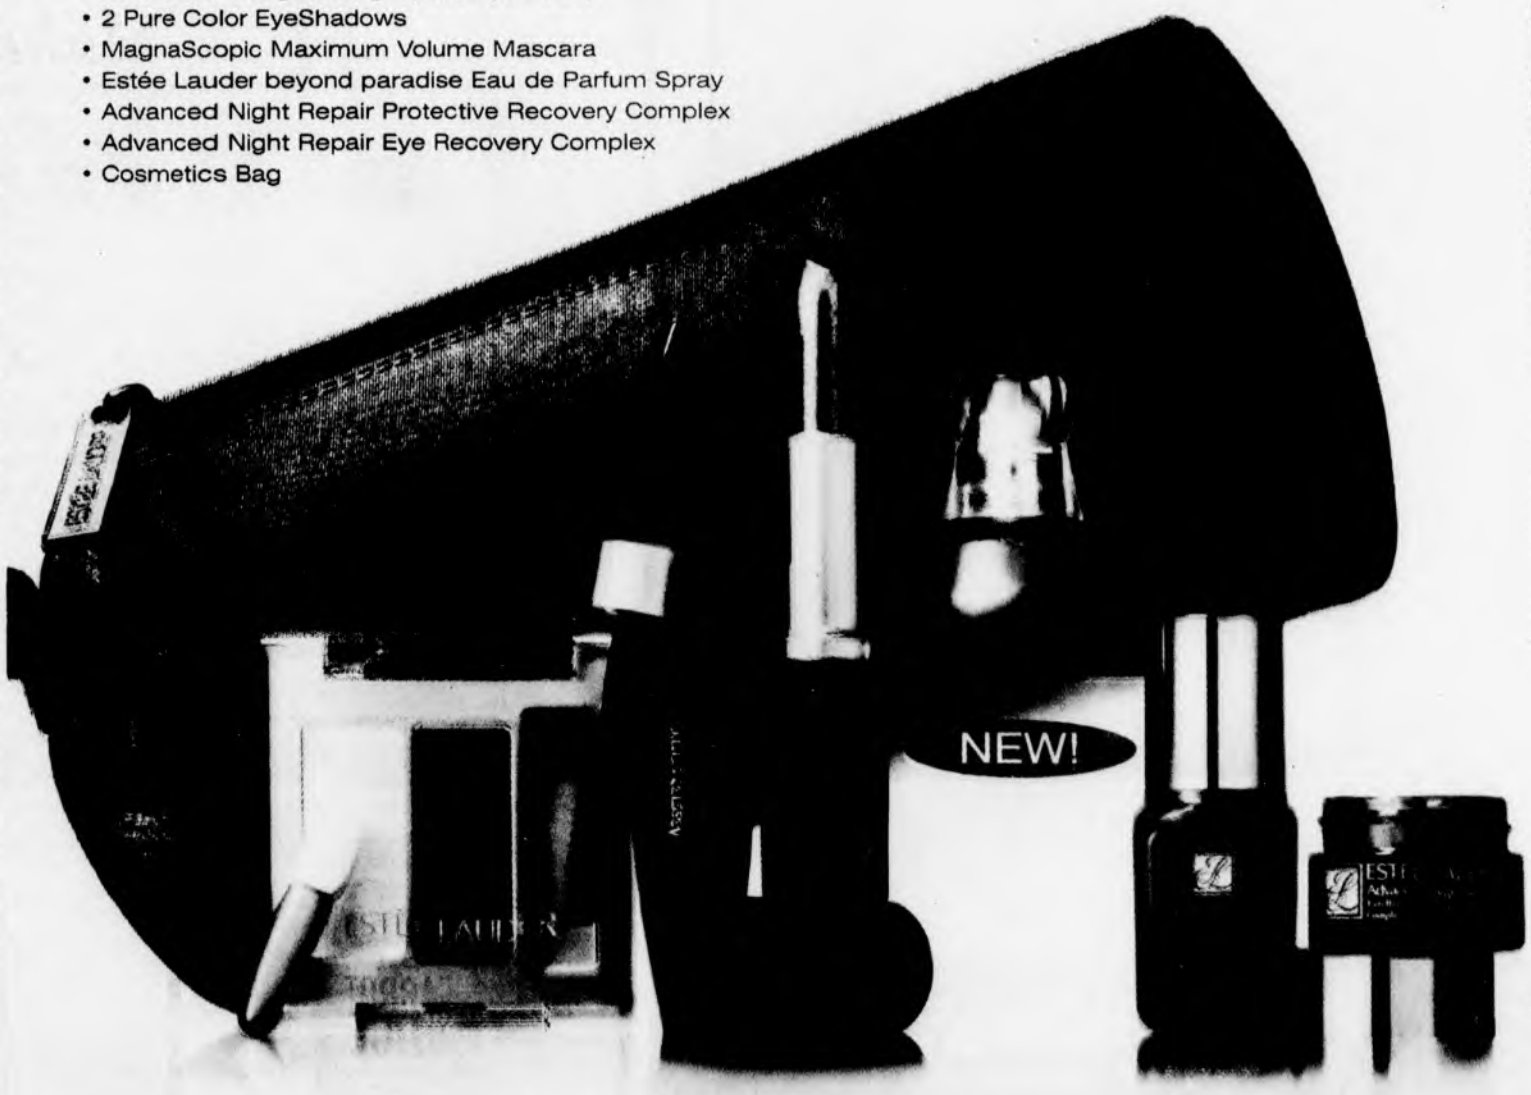
While Waterfield has assured the town there will be no loss of parking spaces, it has been necessary for the company to rethink the parking scheme to assure handicapped accessibility. Dormitzer said the result of all the re-workings has yielded parking spaces that are "too narrow and too few," which will affect the merchants.

Sturdy added the area of the village which needs the most work — where the Village Butcher Shop & Deli and Cohasset News are located — isn't going to be touched at all with the current plans, which he thinks should be a priority before extending the sidewalks to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Ripley Road. If the entire village is revamped except for that area, things will "still look pretty shabby when they're done," he said.

Dormitzer also said high intensity discharge lighting or HID, which is used to mimic daylight conditions, is on the table. He said if HID is used, the Village would illuminated like a used-car dealership. Softer lighting is needed, he said.

The town hired the Waterfield Design Group to design the new streetscape as part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, which has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for through grants and private donations. Town Manager Mark Haddad expects construction to last for approximately six months. A clerk of the works from Waterfield will oversee the construction for $46,320 and the project should be completed by June 30, 2005, he said.





"We are a historic town and we want it to stay that way."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

Haddad said so far, no one has pulled plans for the downtown project. He added selectmen can vote to change the plans within the scope of the Town Meeting vote. He said finalizing the plans has been an ongoing issue in town and "Mr. Dormitzer is trying to finalize those plans, which is good."

Village involvement is nothing new for Dormitzer. He took a lead in the petition drive last summer to nix the "bumpouts," which were proposed at crosswalks in the village. He also served as an advisor to the Village Renaissance Committee, which led the effort to install the town pump in front of Cohasset Hardware among other downtown aesthetic improvements.

On the principal's list are 11th-graders Jacqueline Chase and Megan Stanley. Super work to you all!

COLLEGE ROWER

Senior bow, Matt Morde of Cohasset, is competing on the men's crew team at Ithaca College. Recently, Matt helped lead the second varsity eight to a 6:53 finish ahead of RIT (7:01) and Skidmore (7:08). Keep up the great work Matt.

MOST OUTSTANDING STUDENT

Cohasset native Justin Cullivan recently was named the Most Outstanding Marketing Major at Longwood University in Virginia. Cullivan, who now lives in Williamsburg, Va., received the award April 1 during the senior banquet for Longwood's College of Business & Economics. Also, he was inducted last month into Beta Gamma Sigma, the honor society for business and economics, and will be inducted April 22 into Phi Kappa Phi national honor society. He is a member of the Dean's Student Advisory Board for the College of Business & Economics. He has been named four times to the dean's list and once to the president's list, which is for those with a perfect 4.0 grade-point average, and has a 3.9 GPA in his business courses. His family lived in Cohasset until 1991 when he was in the third grade. Justin still has many relatives in the Cohasset area, including 48 cousins and more than 30 aunts and uncles. His maternal grandmother is Eunice Coady of Scituate, and his paternal grandparents are Larry and Norma Cullivan of Weymouth. His parents are Larry and Cissie Cullivan. Longwood, founded in 1839, is a state-assisted university of about 4,200 students in Farmville, Va.

Last summer Justin did a marketing internship for the Washington Wizards and the Washington Mystics, of the NBA and WNBA, at the MCI Center in Washington, D.C. He was the only intern chosen in the marketing department. "I worked in the marketing department during the day and in game operations at night during Mystics games," he said. "I was involved in some interesting things, including the recruitment of Gilbert Arenas (one of their stars, then a free agent). I took him on a tour of the MCI Center and met his father. I also worked with the Wizards' and Mystics' mascot, G-Wiz." Justin, who will graduate May 8, has been offered a marketing/sales position in the Virginia Beach area, near his home in Williamsburg. It was so great to receive this and know that the adorable little boy with freckles is doing amazingly well. Congratulations Justin.

A colorful experience

Brownies learn lessons at Sunrise program

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A group of girls crowds around a table, paintbrushes in hand, decorating baseball caps in bright spring colors. It didn't seem to phase the gathering that some of the "girls" outrank the others by a difference of at least 60 years in age as they spent the afternoon complimenting each other on a job well done.

On the path to earning their caring and sharing "try-it" patch, the first-grade girls in Brownie Troop 4775 spent Monday afternoon painting with the residents at Sunrise Assisted Living. With the help of their photo album to illustrate, they shared stories about the different accomplishments they have achieved, as well as what it's like to be a Brownie.

"The girls need to participate in three different events in order to earn the patch," said co-troop leader Leesa Bleicken. Already, troop members have delivered items to the local food pantry and have participated in a "circle of sharing," during which they talked about themselves, sharing their likes and dislikes and generally who they are, with the other girls in the troop. Bleicken said making the trip to Sunrise was the perfect way to round out the girls' experience.

"We came here last year as Daisies around Easter," said Bleicken, adding the troop has been really looking forward to the trip and asking when they can go back to "the castle." Bleicken added for the girls to be able to participate in an activity which is not only in the community, but intergenerational, is a wonderful experience. "A lot of the girls don't have grandparents around," she said, and visiting with the residents at Sunrise allows them an opportunity they wouldn't otherwise have. "The residents get as much as we do out of the visit."

As they painted, Clara Baumgarten said she enjoyed her visit, especially since she said she would like to be an artist when she grows up. Looking over at one of the hats painted by a resident she said, "I really like yours," and received a huge smile in return.

The Brownies were also given an idea as to what it will be like to be a Girl Scout as they get older. Claire Pozniak, an 11-year-old Junior Girl Scout, was there to help with the project so she can earn her Junior Aide Award. With that award, she will take one step closer to earning her Bronze Award, the highest honor a Junior Girl Scout can receive.

The girls in troop 4775 have already earned many try-its by participating in various events. The girls took a yoga class taught by a yoga instructor who is also a former Girl Scout. They participated in a sweetheart dance around Valentine's Day as well. They also visited Maggie's Corner to bake cookies with Maggie. They learned what it's like to be a woman business owner, and each girl prepared one question to ask during their visit.

At the end of the visit, the girls recited their Girl Scout promise, "On my honor, I will try: To serve God and my country, to help people at all times, and to live by the Girl Scout Law," which received a round of applause from the delighted residents. The girls also presented the residents with baby chick wind chimes to give them something to remember them by until they visit again. "We'll be back next spring," said Bleicken.

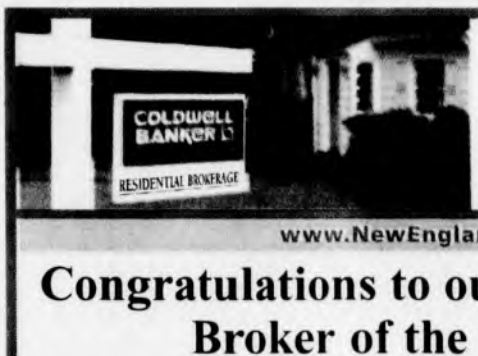
Meet Sandra Durant, SRES

New Sales Associate

A resident of Cohasset for 11 years, Sandra is delighted to join Home Center and, in particular, the Transitions Program. She brings over 30 years of professional experience in project, financial, and resource management gained in the medical/scientific illustration and publishing industries. Her communication and team-building skills enable her to effectively respond to people of all ages and backgrounds.

Over the last five years she has gained in-depth experience helping seniors make wise decisions about selling the family home. This includes managing the capital gains and estate tax implications of owning real estate, obtaining a reverse mortgage, moving to senior communities, and all the issues important to a senior in this new phase of their life. In addition, she has acquired her Senior Real Estate Specialist designation (SRES).

First time buyers as well as experienced buyers and sellers will benefit from her related real estate experience in lovingly restoring and updating antique homes while locating, budgeting and coordinating the efforts of South Shore craftsmen. This has given her considerable knowledge of home construction, design, and remodeling. It also reflects her respect for the integrity of neighborhoods and the history of South Shore communities.



Transitions™ simplifying change

She is a member of the Cohasset Open Space Committee, Community Garden Club of Cohasset as Publicity Chair, the Cohasset Yacht Club, and is the Vice-Chair of the Education Committee of the South Shore Art Center.

Sandra has two children and currently lives on the water with her husband, a lifelong Cohasset resident. They are avid sailors.

MOST OUTSTANDING STUDENT

Cohasset native Justin Cullivan recently was named the Most Outstanding Marketing Major at Longwood University in Virginia. Cullivan, who now lives in Williamsburg, Va., received the award April 1 during the senior banquet for Longwood's College of Business & Economics. Also, he was inducted last month into Beta Gamma Sigma, the honor society for business and economics, and will be inducted April 22 into Phi Kappa Phi national honor society. He is a member of the Dean's Student Advisory Board for the College of Business & Economics. He has been named four times to the dean's list and once to the president's list, which is for those with a perfect 4.0 grade-point average, and has a 3.9 GPA in his business courses. His family lived in Cohasset until 1991 when he was in the third grade. Justin still has many relatives in the Cohasset area, including 48 cousins and more than 30 aunts and uncles. His maternal grandmother is Eunice Coady of Scituate, and his paternal grandparents are Larry and Norma Cullivan of Weymouth. His parents are Larry and Cissie Cullivan. Longwood, founded in 1839, is a state-assisted university of about 4,200 students in Farmville, Va.

Last summer Justin did a marketing internship for the Washington Wizards and the Washington Mystics, of the NBA and WNBA, at the MCI Center in Washington, D.C. He was the only intern chosen in the marketing department. "I worked in the marketing department during the day and in game operations at night during Mystics games," he said. "I was involved in some interesting things, including the recruitment of Gilbert Arenas (one of their stars, then a free agent). I took him on a tour of the MCI Center and met his father. I also worked with the Wizards' and Mystics' mascot, G-Wiz." Justin, who will graduate May 8, has been offered a marketing/sales position in the Virginia Beach area, near his home in Williamsburg. It was so great to receive this and know that the adorable little boy with freckles is doing amazingly well. Congratulations Justin.

EDITORIAL

Don't be a litterbug!

Last week, when driving along Route 3 on our way to the Quincy Adams T station, a glance at the highway shoulder revealed mile upon mile of trash from Styrofoam beverage cups and plastic water bottles to cigarette wrappers and plastic grocery bags making the roadside a virtual dump.

The spectacle got us thinking — not about whether inmates from the House of Correction should be out there with garbage bags collecting all the litter — as some might say. But we started wondering about our apparent lack of civic pride here in the Bay State and what causes us to be such litterbugs.

Massachusetts is surely not the only state with the problem, but judging from what we have seen this spring along our state and municipal roadways – we're not the cleanest of the 50 states.

A good portion of our readers are old enough to recall the "Keep America Beautiful – Don't be a Litterbug!" campaign that started back in the mid-1950s.

According to the City of Tuscon, Ariz. website, "litterbug" was coined by Tuscon resident Annette H. Richards back in 1952 about littering and vandalism in national parks. Richards' magazine article was picked up by Reader's Digest and the word "litterbug" swept the country.

We think it's high time the "Don't be a Litterbug" slogan made a comeback. A quick perusal of "litterbug" sites on Google revealed how widespread the problem is. We even found a quiz for moms and dads titled "Are you the parent of a litterbug?"

Now that all the snow has melted and grass has yet to grow, the litter that our disposable society apparently wants to toss with abandon is totally exposed. It's so bad along the highway that if you picked up guests at the airport from out-of-state or out-of-the-country, you might travel home in the middle lane so cars passing on the right and left would shield their view of the trash pit.

And it's not just the highway. In some area towns, the side streets are full of litter showing that a local shipshape volunteer day is sorely needed!

But just what makes us toss our trash out our automobile windows? What's the mentality behind dropping trash next to a barrel rather than inside it?

At the state level, expanding the bottle bill to include deposits on all plastic bottles might help. Keeping a litterbag in our cars is a necessity. But the problem goes much deeper than refunds and trash bags.

An education program in Massachusetts is needed to make being a litterbug unattractive. We discovered through the Internet that Pennsylvania has brought the anti-litterbug campaign back to try and solve its roadside trash problems.

According to litterbug.org, which is the Pennsylvania website, litter is more than an eyesore. Every 12 minutes a fire starts in litter; litter causes thousands of auto and bicycle accidents a year, with damage to tires costing millions of dollars; rats thrive in litter and have fleas that carry disease; and each year thousands of animals strangle or choke from litter.

It's time we here in Massachusetts started fighting the litter problem too. We can start right away at home and in our own cars by making sure our families and friends dispose of litter properly.

Internships for college students

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee announces that there are several paid internships available to college-aged students from Cohasset who are interested in Democratic politics — and numerous additional opportunities for those who are interested in volunteering in events such as the Democratic National Convention which will take place in Boston this July 26-30.

Deadlines are fast approaching for each of the five paid internships so students should not delay in responding. The internships are as follows: The John F. Kennedy Scholarships/Internships, each for $1,500, awarded to one male and one female. The deadline for applications is April 18.

The John Joseph Moakley Democratic Internship. One scholarship is available to pay a student $2,000 for work at the Democratic State Committee Headquarters in Quincy over the summer.

The Bob Farmer Fund Internship Program (paid summer internship for one female and one male) is available from the Democratic State Party office.

In addition to the paid internships, volunteer positions are still available for the Democratic National Convention and for the South Shore Coordinated Democratic Campaign.

For more information contact Agnes McCann, Chair of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee 781-383-0222, Democratic State Committee Member Fred Koed 781-383-6640, or the State Party directly at 617 472-0637.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Water commission focused on quality

TO THE EDITOR:

The Water Commission would like to reply to the recent Letter to the Editor about the reporting of TTHM (Total Trihalomethanes) and HAA5 (Haloecetic Acids) detected in the Cohasset drinking water. Found in most treated drinking water supplies, these substances are produced when chlorine (added to the water to protect public health from harmful bacteria) reacts with organic matter dissolved or suspended in the water. In 2000, the Cohasset Water Commission instituted a program to voluntarily test for these disinfectant by-products.

Since 2000 we have taken action to reduce the levels of TTHM and HAA5 in the Cohasset water system. Because the levels detected in 2003 were elevated enough to be of concern to the Commission this matter remains an on-going area of focus for the Commission. For the last year, and continuing throughout 2004, we have introduced several new measures to further reduce TTHM and HAA5 levels. Beginning in 2004, we will be held to a higher standard concerning the reduction disinfectant by-products, and we fully anticipate the Cohasset water supply will be in compliance with these stricter regulations.

Today the Water Commission is 10 years into an aggressive system rehabilitation project in which we have spent over $15 million dollars to address many system deficiencies and to improve drinking water quality. Our plan is to continue to the improvements and upgrades, and at the recent Town Meeting we were given the authority to spend an additional $23 million over the next 5 years on our goal to make Cohasset's water system second to none.

We appreciate your confidence in our work and we assure that we are working to improve quality and delivery of your water.

Pat Martin feels valued, appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

One might think that after losing an election a person might feel unsupported or unappreciated. This has certainly not been the case for me. Since losing re-election to the School Committee, I must say, that I have never felt more loved or appreciated by a community in my life. The amount of support I have received from the citizens of Cohasset over the past two weeks has been nothing short of amazing. It has come in the form of hugs, notes, tears, phone calls, visits, flowers, and warm and supportive sentiments from folks I hardly knew. I wish to thank the over 1,000 people who had confidence in my abilities and voted for me in this most recent school committee election. But almost just as important, the dozens of people who have taken the time to write a note of thanks or to offer me their support and gratitude on the street, in the schools, in the supermarket or in my front yard. Thank you. I feel very appreciated and valued for the six years I served this community.

I wish the new school committee and incoming superintendent the best of luck knowing that what lies ahead for them will be challenging to say the least. I am now happy to take my place along aside the many school supporters who work outside the membership of the school committee and be thankful that I am fortunate to live in such a wonderful town as Cohasset with so many caring and thoughtful people. It will be both my privilege and pleasure to continue working with you on behalf of our schools and community. Thank you so very much for your love and support.

Harvey thanks 1,117; recommends policies

TO THE EDITOR:

1,117 visionary Cohasset residents stood up and were counted on April 3. I thank each one for their support and sharing a vision of a better future for Cohasset. These 1,117 residents recognized that the practices of the past will invariably lead to a decay in the values that represent the Town we love. These 1,117 residents could not be coerced by the status quo and stood boldly for reform in Town government.

Looking ahead, I sincerely hope that the new Board of Selectmen will also recognize the need to reform before we lose control of the ability to elevate and enhance our community. In representing the 1,117 residents that see the need to reform, I ask that the new administration change course in the areas that threaten our future, by:

- Adopting economic policies that support controlled growth and respects the rights of current residents, requiring new residents to pay their fair share.
- Replacing threats of downgrading vital services or overrides to tax rates with invitations to users of services to support and fund the services.
- Introducing policies designed to make the Cohasset School System the best in the nation without being the most expensive.
- Providing temporary relief for residents facing hardships without eroding the Town's economic infrastructure.
- Preemptively taking steps to protect the beauty of the Town and its natural resources instead of reacting to threats only after they explode before us.
- Adopting policies that permit residents to retain their homes and use the increasing value offset the increasing tax burden.
- Innovative financing to accelerate implementation of a sewer system to benefit existing residents.
- Proactively monitoring revenues and controlling spending to prevent exceeding approved budgets.
- Acting as an executive body that allows the Town boards and committees to control tactical decisions and allows residents to elect new committees where needed.
- Providing an open, easy, understandable dialog with residents in which each voice is given the respect afforded to it by the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

My best wishes go to the new Board of Selectmen and sincere desire that this administration escape the vicious trap of "comfort of old practices" and offer the leadership that will give hope and inspiration to these 1,117 visionary Cohasset residents and the others that will surely join them.

Doghouse auction was a big success

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, I would like to thank all the people who helped make our first annual "Barkitecture" fundraiser a huge success. Barkitecture, was a live auction of designer doghouses custom-built by architects and members of New England's Building community, accompanied by a silent auction of over 75 items donated by talented local artisans and business owners. The proceeds from the event, totaling close to $20,000, will be put towards the construction and operational costs of the newly opened Hull Seaside Animal Shelter (HSAR).

The event was sponsored by Animal PhaRXm, Roberts Animal Hospital & Animal Care Center of Marshfield, Abington Savings Bank, PetCo and the people who moved, stored and moved the doghouses again and again, McKee's Moving & Storage. We were amazed by the talents of the people who volunteered their services, including graphic designers Al Bollinger, web designers Kathryn Von Tungelnm & Colleen MacDonald, award designer Erne Lavoie and engraver, Ron Weaver, sound technicians Julie Feola and Jason Dick, and the talented celtic and country blues musicians Rob & Tim.

We auctioned off an impressive 20 doghouses with varying themes, including Doggie Seuss, Doghouse 1 (think "Andy Warhol"), and Bauwauhaus, to name but a few. P&P Design of Hull created a "Pugoda", a gorgeous 6' high temple in which any dog would be lucky to worship or simply spend an afternoon meditating.

Architect Don Ritz of Hull, and Miquelle David Design of Marion created "Pup Tent" a playful, portable abode for the camping canine. Shoreline Studios and Edgewater Architects of Hull came up with "The Safe House," a place in which fugitive dogs can lie low in illicit beach spots in the summer; while Strekalovsky Hoit Raymond worked with quality control canine consultant Harley Davidson to design a classic New England red barn-like structure, with a front porch perfect for watching approaching passerby. Sally Weston Associates and Turner Custom Building built a lovely Vineyard Victorian

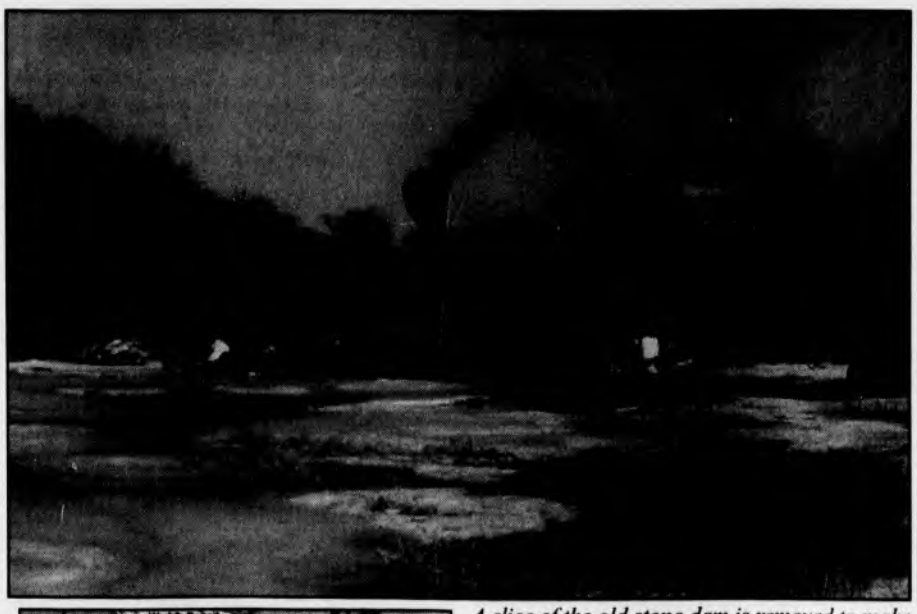
Where once there was a salt marsh... there will be again

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

It wasn't so long ago that people saw a salt marsh, that transitional zone between land and sea, and thought, "Bring in the fill." Fill in those soggy, muddy, buggy, sometimes stinky, seemingly monotonous, useless lowlands and you can create dry, productive upland. Such filling was how much of Boston was created and how, over the decades, townships extended their borders, farms their acreage and homeowners their backyards.



Little did anyone realize that the trade off would, in the long run, be detrimental. Salt marshes, for all their mosquitoes, green head flies, occasional whiffs of hydrogen sulfide and pockets of stagnant water, are now recognized as critical habitats. The lush, thin ribbons of low-lying salt marsh that hug the coast are some of the most biologically productive ecosystems on Earth, acre for acre more productive than the most fertile farmland. Offering food, nesting sites and protective cover, salt marshes are home to migratory bird species. They serve as nurseries for more than 75 percent of our commercial fish and shellfish species. With their sponge-like peat and meadows of Spartina grasses, salt marshes absorb flood waters and storm surges. They filter septic waste and store ground water and with every tide they export organic detritus that joins the marine food web.

Today, aware of what we've lost by generations of "reclaiming" the land, there's a new movement afoot to reverse the damage done to salt marshes. Reclamation, these days, means returning salt marshes to the way they were, undoing the damage that was done decades, even centuries, ago. Man has always been able to outpace Nature in destroying what it took her generations to create but, slowly, on Nature's terms, salt marshes are coming back to life.

Next door in Hingham we are fortunate to have such a reclamation taking place before our eyes. A year ago, the Trustees of Reservations joined forces with the Massachusetts Wetlands Restoration Project and began the painstaking process of returning the impoverished Damde Meadows at World's End to a productive, biologically diverse habitat.

In pre-colonial days, Damde Meddowes was a typical East Coast estuarine environment. Fanning out, east to west, from Martin's Cove to the Weir River, the marsh separated Planter's Hill and World's End, both glacial drumlins that once were islands, from the mainland known as Cushing's Neck. Early settlers, recognizing the farming potential of Planter's Hill, constructed two stone dams, at Martin's Cove and the Weir River that provided access to the drumlin from the mainland, but also cut off the tidal flow of salt water to the marsh. Over time, and with the help of a man-made drainage system that prevented the backflow of saltwater into the marsh, the wetland became a dry, 15-acre upland meadow where hay was harvested until the mid-20th century.

When the Trustees of Reservations took over stewardship of World's End in 1967, they stopped cutting the meadow. The subsequent failure of the drainage system allowed fresh water to accumulate from rainfall and runoff, turning Damde Meadow into a shallow, brackish pond. The significant size of the parcel made it an excellent candidate for restoration and by the early 1990s, planning and permitting were underway to reestablish Damde Meadow as a healthy salt marsh. Ten years later, in March of 2003, the sound of bulldozers could be heard on the marsh, only this time the machines were not filling, but removing. A slice was taken out of each dam and two four-by-eight concrete box culverts were lowered into place. Conservationists watched with delight as salt water rushed into the marsh for the first time in more than three centuries.

A slice of the old stone dam is removed to make way for a 4-by-8 foot box culvert.

A 1937 map showing Damde Meddowes stretching from Martin's Cove to the Weir River. Stone dams were built at each end, effectively closing off the salt marsh to tidal flow. The dam at the Martin's Cove entrance to the marsh has now been replaced by a box culvert.

Subtle renewal

In the year since, rangers at World's End who daily inspect the progress can see the subtle renewal of Damde Meadow. One change is readily apparent and even the casual passerby can't fail to notice that the invasive common reed known as Phragmite is suffering the effects of being inundated twice daily with fresh seawater. An aggressive grass that colonizes the edges of neglected marshes, Phragmite thrives in soils tainted by pollution. The tall, conspicuous plumed plant whose name means "fence" in Greek, dramatically alters any habitat it invades. With the exception of offering some cover for Red-winged blackbirds, Phragmite provides little wildlife value. As the four acres of Phragmite continue to die back, the marsh will broaden to the edges of the upland, enhancing the scenic view.

Over the next five years — and the Trustees urge patience as the process unfolds — monitoring will be done for salinity, soil, temperature and water quality changes as well as for changes in plant, bird and fish species. As the tides move in and out, scouring and lowering the floor of the marsh, standing water will be drawn out on the ebb tide. Once mud flats are exposed at low tide, native salt marsh vegetation will again take root. Horseshoe crabs, green crabs and shellfish will all return.

The marsh's biodiversity has already been enhanced with the return of limpets, hermit crabs and mud snails. Fish, too, are more plentiful, though avian diversity has diminished with the tidal flow. Waterfowl and wading birds, including Mallard and black ducks, egrets and Great blue heron have been observed, but populations of shorebirds who depend on exposed flats for foraging have declined. They, too, are expected to rebound once tidal flats are again exposed.

Until then, for visitors to World's End, the sound of salt water rushing in and out of the culverts is, alone, music to the ears. In time, a prairie of waving, rustling Spartina grasses will add its own rhythms and the world below the surface will teem with life. The salt marsh will be a microcosm of that one great process Thoreau described as the passing away of one life to make way for another.

On my recent visit, ducks were gliding on the water and bird song filled the still-bare branches of trees. The salty breeze carried a whisper of Spring and in another few days, Spring will, indeed, make its official entrance. Everywhere, the land will begin to renew itself, but at one end of the world, renewal is already well underway.

Let's do a study!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The National Institutes of Health is about to launch a $2.7 billion womb-to-maturity study of 100,000 American children to determine the effect of the environment on their health, a project that is expected to keep a whole generation, possibly two, of researchers on the job for at least 21 years.

Here we go again!

There are probably around 300 million people in the United States and I estimate that at any given moment about 150 million of them are engaged in studying something or other from the likelihood of a tipsy sorority girl escaping from a fraternity party with her virtue intact to the mating habits of the lesser snail darter.

Outside of a couple of paragraphs in USA Today on a slow news day or a one liner on Dave Letterman or five minutes of outrage on Rush Limbaugh, is anyone paying attention? And are the results worth the effort?

I'll bet you didn't know that researchers at the Monell Chemical Center in Philadelphia studied 53 two-week-old youngsters for seven months and found that their preferences in food were influenced by the first flavors they tasted. What a sneaky way to get the kid to eat lima beans!

Or that a survey by Professor Hirofumi Tachibana of Kyushu University in Japan has discovered that a powerful antioxidant called EGCG in green tea is strong enough to inhibit the growth of cancer cells in lungs, breasts and prostate glands. Two or three cups of green tea a day could do the job.

Or that a two-year study of 540 kids led by University of California researcher Stephen Hinshaw (no relation) turned up the vital information that those who used Ritalin grew a half inch less and gained eight pounds less than those who didn't. That's certainly on for the Guinness Book of Records.

What do you make of the New Hampshire Health Assessment Project's body mass index analysis of 1,536 third graders in 21 schools that heavier children tend to come from lower income homes and score lower on tests. May I suggest New Hampshire raise the minimum wage and everything will be all right?

Or the findings of the folks at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh that people are more likely to spend more money when they are sad or the report from researchers in Holland that, for some reason that no one can explain, the long, hot days of August increase the risk of catching a sexually transmitted disease.

Then there's the report from Dimitri Christakis, a pediatrician at Children's Hospital and Regional Medical Center in Seattle, who studied 1,500 kids up to the age of 7 and discovered that those who watched television three hours a day were more likely to develop attention deficit disorder.

Me? I like the study that was conducted in Sweden showing that acrylamide in one's diet does not give one cancer of the bladder, kidneys and colon as a 2002 study indicated. Research moves a little too fast for me. I'm still trying to find out that acrylamide is.

Gingerbread cottage, complete with cathedral ceilings, gingerbread trim with dog-bone cutouts, a lab weathervane and shabby chic interior. This cottage quickly sold for over $2,000 — and they generously offered to build and donate additional cottages for the runner-up bidders! The South Shore Charter School, grades 3-5, created a very fun and impressively constructed pencil-house, which was purchased by several animal-loving Hingham residents, who intend to share it and use it as a fundraising tool for the shelter!

Finally, we'd like to acknowledge the generosity of our local press that put the word out several weeks prior to the event; we received some great coverage that has kept our phone lines ringing ever since!

HEALTH NOTES

A lush, green lawn isn't priceless

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Next Monday the Conservation Commission is tentatively calling a meeting to discuss a new initiative: 'Cohasset Go Green'. We live in a complex society and doing the right thing is sometimes very difficult. For a long time, I have supported environmental initiatives and wondered why this is so easy for some of us and not for others. For example, why do I have a lawn which has not in 10 years seen fertilizer. On the other hand why did my predecessor in the house spend enormous labor and resources on his lawn. Neither lawn was perfect, whatever that means. Each served its purpose. Assuredly, there's a need to have special treatment for sites with special needs. Sports fields and heavily used areas may need special handling. But needs change. Tennis used to be played on lawns. So, I believe that going green implies separating that which is practical from that which harms environmental health. If a playing field is used so heavily that it needs to be dug up frequently, or needs special turf, then so be it.

On the other hand, there's an enormous need and opportunity out there for us to do better as a whole. According to the Garden Club of America (GCA), every year, three million tons of fertilizers keep American lawns greener than normal or necessary. Incorrect or excessive fertilizer application contributes to surface and ground water pollution, causes rapid, lush growth that makes the grass more susceptible to diseases. But more importantly, the excessive use of fertilizer adds to the algae which threatens to choke our ponds and estuaries. The risks of pollution of water and wetlands, creation of health risks for people and wildlife, and threats to biodiversity and the environment can be reduced by intelligent lawn and plant management. Generally at a substantial reduction in expense.

Also every year, 67 million pounds of pesticides are used on American lawns. Pesticides include insecticides, herbicides, fungicides and rodenticides. There are risks to human health and the environment in the use of pesticides. Natural controls, pest resistant varieties of seed, biological products, herbicidal and insecticidal soaps lower the risks, as does the introduction of beneficial insects.

Further, the practices the GCA recommend will result in a lawn which may not require any fertilizer at all. Grass clippings contain about 4 percent nitrogen and, left on the lawn, will provide one-third to one-half of your lawn's nutrient needs. Changing from a lawn that uses oil, gas, water and pesticides to the 'New American Lawn', a GCA term, with all of its benefits demonstrates "Thinking Globally. Acting Locally." Your New American Lawn will demonstrate a commitment to a more ecologically sound world.

The Board of Health , the Conservation Commission, the Open Space Committee, and the Water Commission are joining in promoting a healthier attitude about lawn care. Next week's meeting is a beginning. At that meeting, some of the items we expect to discuss are:

- Agree on Cohasset Common and other park treatments. (current and preferred.)
- Ball and play fields: seek recommendations.
- Who takes phone calls that our greens aren't green enough, and what do they say? There are about 300 of these calls every year.
- Where can we find out whether 'Going Green' will cost the Town more or less?
- Can someone take a look at the relative real costs of such a plan?
- What does anyone want to do about town registration of lawn care providers. What are all the implications?

In the end, it seems to come down to our expectations for the place in life we occupy. If we expect people to see us as perfect, or even better than normal, well, perhaps it's reasonable to need all elements of our life to be the best that we can make them. But if we are willing to back off to a reasonable degree, we may find that we can survive without the absolutely perfect space we want to live in. Particularly if doing so lessens the environmental and health risks which modern progress imposes on us.

In the meantime speak to your lawn-care provider about spreading too much fertilizer and pesticides and ask him if he uses GCA guidelines for lawn care, or ask him to contact the Conservation Commission for their guidelines for healthy lawn care.

What do you think?

Romney's new economic secretary has a full plate

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Showing how a governor is responsible for the condition of the state's economy is akin to eating soup with a fork, yet the Democrats picked up their forks as soon as Mitt Romney named Ranch Kimball his new economic affairs secretary.

Governors make promises routinely about employment and prosperity, but political veterans agree: like baseball managers, they always get too much credit when things go well and too much blame when things go badly. The political arguments are deeply superficial, if superficiality can be deep, because they ignore the huge difference in time between current conditions and the effects of governors' actions.

That, of course, does not prevent the arguing. Therefore, when Kimball was introduced, the Democrats took the opportunity to say he should have been appointed sooner, and was the wrong person for the job (too consultant-y — too much like Romney), and by the way, Romney should have created more jobs by now. This is an election year.

When Kimball starts work April 26, he will indeed be thinking about job creation, but only in the way businesses think about profits. Good businesses think about product first, and customers, to get to the goal of a black bottom line. The equivalent for Kimball is thinking about the elements of building and maintaining a great business climate. Quickly defined, that means competitive tax rates and regulatory approach, and an environment where people in Massachusetts get a good education and can afford a safe place to live, and employers therefore can find well-educated, stable employees.

Actually, Kimball doesn't have to do that much thinking about the first item. His boss isn't going to raise broad-based taxes. Some business lobbyists grumble that Romney has already raised more than a few fees and levies, and are put out that Romney is seeking to raise $90 million more in his proposed budget through what he calls loophole closures. They call it a tax hike. In any event, Kimball can be expected to let the governor's office worry about tax policy for the most part. What he can be expected to focus on is selling the state's efforts in key areas:

• K-12 Education: This is consistently on the top of the list of items the business lobby requests from state government – ongoing improvement in both teacher and student performance, with rising test scores.

• Job Training: Democrats such as Michael Rodrigues, House chairman of the Commerce and Labor Committee, praise Kimball's predecessor Robert Pozen but grumble that Romney himself is not willing enough to spend time with them creating bipartisan programs to establish new job training programs and target them by region and industry. They also disliked Romney's vetoes to the economic stimulus bill they passed last year, and sneered when he moved to put some of its funding back.

• Higher Education: With a new UMass president in place, businesspeople are eager to see if the governor and his people now embrace innovation and improvement in the state's higher-ed sector, starting with a $430 million capital-improvement plan proposed for UMass. Romney's budget restores some of the higher ed funds cut recently.

• Housing: This might not immediately appear to be a business-promotion area, but it's long been observed that some companies that shy away from Massachusetts do so because their workers don't feel they can afford the American dream here and have more affordable options in other states.

On the general political front, the governor will trumpet good employment numbers and the Democrats will brandish bad ones, regardless of how tight the connection really is between administration action and economic data. To some degree, day in and day out, Kimball doesn't have to worry so much about that political conflict. He'll be the doing the governor enough good if he pursues improvement in the systems that service the middle class. That's where the bulk of the workers for high-value companies come from, and on the first Tuesday in November, happy workers turn into happy voters.

Kimball's appointment was almost lost in the shuffle, so much else was going on:

• Court appears to be arbiter in redistricting case — House leadership put forward yet another revision of representative districts in Boston, but plaintiffs said the plan still doesn't seem to provide enough power for minority voters or opportunity for minority candidates. The panel overseeing the House redistricting case plans a hearing April 16. State election officials offered a plan to give candidates more time to collect nomination signatures, given the ongoing legal battle, and the plaintiffs in the case indicated they intend to challenge that proposal as well, changing the new timeline favors incumbents.

• State could be another $200m in the hole after capital gains ruling — The Supreme Judicial Court said the state was incorrect to change the capital gains taxation rate to 5.3 on May 1, 2003. Changing it mid-year violated Article 44 of the state Constitution, the court said, noting tax law changes typically take effect with changes in the calendar year. Now, a Suffolk County Superior Court justice will decide whether Jan. 1, 2002 or Jan. 1 2003 should be the implementation date of the flat rate, which replaced staggered rates intended to reward patient investors. If the justice chooses 2003, the state will have to send $200 million back to people who paid at the new higher rate for the last part of 2002. That would exacerbate the state's budget problems, but Gov. Romney told the press, "I'd far rather see tax cuts in the future than tax cuts applied in the past," he said. "It's likely to be somewhat disruptive, but that's the nature of government. We have to live with the fact that the courts have to do what they feel is right and it's our job to implement the decisions."

• Romney proposes auto insurance reform as a joint enterprise — The governor said he wants to work with Democratic leaders and his frequent foe, Attorney General Thomas Reilly, to create plan making auto insurance rates more reasonable in Massachusetts. The governor said his goals are to inject more competition into rate settings; spread the costs of bad driving more equitably among groups of drivers; and reduce the amount of subsidies that good drivers now pay to cover bad and inexperienced drivers.

• Wagner says Romney merger of transportation units makes little sense — House Transportation Committee Chairman Joseph Wagner, D-Chicopee, critiqued Romney's bid to merge the Mass. Turnpike Authority and the Mass. Highway Department. Wagner said the merger is primarily a bid to grab $190 million in turnpike reserves for state budget balancing next year, not a genuine bid to improve government operations. The administration countered that Democrats are simply resisting reform, and that the $200 million saved by the merger will have to be found elsewhere if it doesn't go through.

• Healey outlines sweeping changes in crime prevention — Some of the state's better known crime-prevention programs, such as the school-based DARE, don't stand the test of statistical analysis and should be replaced with more promising strategies, according to a bipartisan panel tasked with evaluating new approaches to heading off crime. The most notable recommendation announced by Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey, who chaired the commission, was post-release supervision for 20,000 inmates who now go completely, or relatively unmonitored, a situation that analysts say contributes to a higher rate of recidivism.

• Housing prices have doubled since '97, report finds — A study conducted by the Center for Urban and Regional Policy at Northeastern University determined that in addition to the run-up in prices, slow growth in housing supply makes an economic rebound much less viable. Essentially, the number of housing units created won't equal the number of new jobs a robust recovery would create, the study showed. The most significant suggestion was that lawmakers preserve and strengthen programs that penalize communities for resisting affordable housing creation.

• Immigrants lobby for tuition, licenses — Hundreds of new immigrants crowded Statehouse corridors and Gardner Auditorium to push for a slate of laws designed to make life easier for recent arrivals and undocumented immigrants. Topping the list is a measure that would allow immigrants, regardless of status, to study at Massachusetts public colleges and universities at the in-state tuition rates; advocates say that bill, like one allowing undocumented aliens to obtain driver's licenses, would recognize the contributions recent arrivals make to the state's economy and quality of life.

• Zapp bill becomes ally Zapp law — As the mother of Alexandra Zapp looked on, Gov. Romney signed into law legislation that expands the crimes for which a sex offender may be held behind bars after the end of a criminal sentence. Zapp's murder at a highway rest stop was the impetus for the new statute, which becomes effective immediately.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com

April 9, 2004

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on four roll calls and local senators' votes on two roll calls from prior sessions. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

BIG DIG INVESTIGATION (H 4330)

House 130-22, Senate 32-5, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of a section providing that $57,250 from the state auditor's budget be used to fund the position of executive director of a Big Dig oversight commission that was established in 1996. Override supporters said it is important to continue to monitor the Big Dig and ensure that taxpayer money is wisely used. They noted that the auditor's office has done a great job investigating and exposing problems with the project. Override opponents said the auditor and this executive director have done very little to uncover the many problems with the Big Dig and noted that there are currently other oversight entities that are doing an effective job monitoring the project. They argued that it is irresponsible to waste more money on a position that fails to uncover waste. (A "Yea" vote is for earmarking the $57,250. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Senator: Y — Representative: Y

MORE BIG DIG (H 4330)

House 132-22, Senate 32-4, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of an additional $57,250 for the state auditor's budget. Override supporters said that this money would be used to fund the position of executive director of a Big Dig oversight commission. They argued that the additional funding was necessary so that the auditor does not have to take the funding out of his budget that is already very tight. Override opponents again said the position has done very little to uncover waste at the Big Dig. They argued that if the auditor wants to fund this position, he should pay for it out of his regular budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the $57,250. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Senator: Y — Representative: Y

$2 MILLION FOR STRIP SEARCH SUIT (H 4330)

House first 88-63, first favored but failed to gain the two-thirds margin necessary to override Gov. Romney's veto of a section providing $2 million to fund part of Suffolk County's class action law suit settlement with some 5400 women who were illegally strip searched at the Suffolk County Jail. The House later reconsidered the matter, several representatives changed their votes and the veto was overridden on a 111-39 vote. The settlement was the result of a court ruling that it was illegal to have a policy that requires an automatic strip search of female pre-arraignment detainees but does not mandate the same search for male detainees. Override supporters said that Suffolk County has already paid $2.2 million and simply cannot afford the additional $2 million without making major budget cuts that would decimate the prison's budget and affect public safety. They said that the state and/or Suffolk County would likely be sued unless payment is made. Override opponents that the lawsuit is the responsibility of Suffolk County and argued that the state should not have to pay for this. They said it is outrageous for the state to provide additional funding for one favored and powerful county when many other counties across the state are also feeling the budget crunch and could use additional state funds. (Both roll call votes are listed. A "Yea" vote is for providing $2 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).

MacCarthy, who finished 108 votes behind Williams, reported total receipts of $750 and expenditures of $598.39 from Feb. 25-March 26.

Incumbent Pat Martin, who finished third, reported $800 in receipts and $631.65 in expenditures from Jan. 1-March 26. Scott O'Grady, who finished a distant fourth, did not raise or spend any money during his campaign.

In the planning board race, Joseph Nedrow signed the form, along with candidates who were unopposed, that he did not receive any contributions or made any expenditures. Stuart Ivimey, who won the one-year seat with 1,315 votes to Nedrow's 1,038, did not file a preliminary campaign finance report. In a telephone interview Tuesday, Ivimey said he did not accept any donations but paid for signs, mailings and flyers himself. He said he will a file campaign finance report by the 30-day post-election deadline.

On its campaign finance report, the Preserve Town Services Committee, a pro-override Political Action Committee, did not report any receipts or expenditures by the March 26 pre-election filing deadline. In a telephone interview, Chairwoman Kimberly Barba Canney said the committee raised $1500 and spent $841.79 on a town-wide mailing urging support for the override the week before the April 3 Town Election. A full accounting of contributions and expenditures will appear on the committee's post-election campaign report, Canney said.

State law requires candidates to itemize receipts over $50 including the name and address of the contributor. Spofford reported 44 contributions of more than $50, including a $1,000 donation he made to his own campaign. Dormitzer, who also put $1,000 of his own money into his own campaign, reported 13 contributions of more than $50 and a $500 in-kind contribution for printing of campaign signs. Harvey, who put in $2,000 of his own money into his campaign, reported nine contributions of more than $50.

Williams, who reported in-kind contributions of $311, listed 10 contributions of more than $50; MacCarthy and Martin each reported four.

State filing requirements apply to all candidates win or lose. Even those who do not raise or spend any money must sign a form saying they had no activity. In addition to the pre- and post-election reports, candidates must file a year-end report in January 2005.

New brick building planned for Rte. 3A

Lumber. It is estimated the office building would generate about 3,400 gallons of wastewater per day.

The planning board, which continued the public hearing on the plans to April 21, is concerned about the curb cut off Route 3A that is in close proximity to Crocker Lane and the entrance to Cohasset Collision. Town engineer John Modzelewski of Civil Designs said the proposed building would also look a lot closer to 3A than the existing building. He suggested screening with landscaping with an eye to not affecting the site lines of traffic exiting Crocker Lane onto the busy state highway.

Modzelewski also suggested the existing pumping station behind the proposed building be incorporated into the structure so the building could be moved back from 3A. [The pumping station provides adequate water pressure for fire-flow protection for Graham Waste, which is at the top of Crocker Lane]. "That would loosen the front up a little bit," Modzelewski said about moving the building back over the pumping station.

Cavanaro said that "would not be an easy task" but he would take a look at it.

It is not clear where the candy store will move to because the office building is not slated to have retail space.

The owners of the candy store said Tuesday they are looking for another space on 3A and hope to stay in Cohasset. Sweet Surprises has been in business for more than 10 years and was previously located in Cohasset Plaza.

Jewelry as timeless symbols

Talking turkey anytime of year

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I tested a brined breast against a breast that had not been brined and the brined breast won out easily.

Boneless turkey breast is one of those grocery items that is widely available but recipes are hard to come by. Yet, at four to five pounds, it is the perfect "roast" when you are tired of beef and pork. The question is how to turn out a juicy, tasty boneless breast and then prepare a quick pan sauce with the drippings.

Most recipes for roast turkey at Cook's involve brining, and for good reason. The salted water helps the meat to retain moisture during cooking and the salt and sugar (another brine ingredient) enhance flavor. I tested a brined breast against a breast that had not been brined and the brined breast won out easily. It was moister and more flavorful. For two quarts of water, one cup of kosher salt and 1/2 cup sugar made for pleasantly seasoned meat. Two hours of brining made the meat too salty, an hour was not enough, so 1 1/2 hours was just right.

Brining the turkey made for moist and flavorful meat but I wondered if I could infuse more flavor into the roast. The two methods I considered were coating the meat with an herbal mixture and using a compound butter under the skin. After much testing, I discovered that both methods were not worth the effort – I would simply stick with a simple brine solution.

I wanted the turkey breast to come out of the oven with a brown crispy skin, which suggested a very hot oven. To insure well-crisped and browned skin I brushed the roast with butter and to balance the salted brine I also added a few grinds of pepper. I tried cranking the heat at the beginning as well as the end of the cooking process. I found I had best results when the breast was started at 450 degrees for 30 minutes. Next, to best preserve the juicy interior, I let it finish cooking at 350 degrees — about one hour longer. I determined there was no need for a rack with this roast either — the roast cooks evenly without one.

The turkey was now roasted to satisfaction and I hoped I could salvage a quick pan gravy. Rather than onion, I added a minced shallot and sautéed it in the roasting pan. Next I added a couple of tablespoons of flour. Once the flour was incorporated I added 2 cups of chicken stock and a couple teaspoons of chopped fresh thyme. The sauce is then simmered for a couple minutes to thicken and cook out the flour taste. Now I had "Thanksgiving any time of year" and with only a fraction of the work.

ROASTED BONELESS TURKEY BREAST

Don't skip the brining since it is key to this recipe.

1 cup kosher salt or 1/2 cup table salt
1/2 cup granulated sugar
1 boneless turkey breast about 4 1/2 pounds, netted or tied at 1" intervals
1 tablespoon unsalted butter at room temperature
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 medium shallot, finely chopped
2 teaspoons chopped fresh thyme
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups low-sodium chicken broth

1. Dissolve salt and sugar in 2 quarts cold water in large bowl or container. Immerse turkey breast and refrigerate until fully seasoned, 1 1/2 hours. Meanwhile, adjust an oven rack to the center position and heat oven to 450 degrees. Remove turkey from brine and rinse thoroughly under cold water.

2. Place turkey skin-side up in a roasting pan. Rub skin with the butter and season with a few grinds of pepper. Roast 30 minutes. Lower the oven temperature to 350 degrees and rotate roasting pan 180 degrees. Continue to roast until the internal temperature registers 165 degrees, about 50 to 60 minutes more.

3. Remove the pan from the oven and transfer the breast to a cutting board. Put the pan over medium heat and add the chopped shallots and the thyme. Sauté until the shallots are softened, about 2 minutes. Stir in the flour and then gradually add the broth. Cook, stirring or whisking constantly until the gravy is smooth and thickened, about 2 minutes. Taste for seasoning, adjusting with a pinch of salt and freshly ground pepper as needed. Slice the turkey and serve with the gravy.

Serves 6 to 8

Sunlight shed on changes at Sandy Beach

Sticker fee hike is on the table

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

This summer, things will be different at Sandy Beach. There will be a new entrance and exit system, trash pickup every Saturday and Sunday, and possibly a beach monitor at the entrance, keeping tabs on beach stickers.

Sandy Beach Association President Robin Lawrence said after meeting with Town Manager Mark Haddad, DPW Supt. Carl Sestito, Building Inspector Bob Egan, and Police Chief Bob Jackson, they agreed changes needed to be made.

First on the list is how to approach the entrance and exit points which have caused concern over the years. In the past, the beach has had both its north and south entrances open. However, most recently only the south end has been open, in an effort to keep down the number of residents trying to enter without a sticker, as well as slow traffic in the parking lot. In addition, because some young parents had expressed concern over what they perceived as dangerous visitors, they wanted to see the north gate closed so those entering and exiting could be monitored more closely.

Because Lawrence said the "paramount concern of the Sandy Beach Association is safety for residents," there was some talk about incorporating some kind of beach monitor or gate system at the south entrance, to further monitor those who come in and out. However, because of the storm damage which take place at the beach, gates had to be ruled out because it would cost more in maintenance than the town could afford. In addition, it will cost money to hire a beach monitor, which would need to be discussed.

Lawrence said currently, the fire hydrant in the middle of the south entrance is serving as a mini-rotary, which has worked well for regulating traffic. This summer there will be a slight difference. Residents will only be allowed to enter from the side of the south entrance closest to the Cunningham Bridge, and will exit out the other. There will be signs reminding drivers to keep to the right.

To improve the line of sight for drivers, some dune grass will be trimmed back, and the sand pile by the new rotary will also be reduced to allow more room for cars. Haddad said he will be filing permits with the Conservation Commission to ensure all proper measures are taken.

First on the list is how to approach the entrance and exit points which have caused concern over the years.

Trash has also caused some problems at the beach. While the DPW has been emptying bins on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, this summer the town will be contracting out for weekend trash pickup, which will cost roughly $880 for the summer, and the town will split that cost with the Sandy Beach Association.

There was some discussion regarding pets on the beach, and Lawrence said current policy prohibits dogs. However, Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said he sees no reason why early risers who may want to bring their dogs to the beach before it opens at 9 a.m. should be penalized, as long as they pick up after themselves. Selectman Chairman Michael Sullivan said there could also be conflicting messages being sent to pet owners as the signs say dogs are not allowed on the beach, but the Board of Health has made doggie pick-up bags available.

There was also talk of raising the price of all-facilities stickers to help cover the cost of the various maintenance projects at the beach that the Association picks up the tab for. With only 20 percent of residents in town contributing to the Association, there are a limited amount of funds available. However, currently, when a resident is ticketed for not having a sticker, it's not the beach that receives the money, it's the town. By possibly raising fees and allocating a certain portion to the beach, it could help make up the difference. There have been no decisions made as of yet on whether to raise sticker prices, and the Board of Selectmen will be discussing that possibility at upcoming meetings.

For more information on the Sandy Beach Association and the rules and regulations of the beach, please contact Sandy Beach Association President Robin Lawrence at (781) 383-6776, or via e-mail at rm.lawrence@comcast.net.

Household hazardous product collection

Cohasset will have a joint hazardous waste collection day with Hull from 9 a.m.-1p.m., June 5 at a location to be announced.

Accepted materials include solvents, gasoline, motor oil mixtures and other automotive fluids, pesticides, photography chemicals, pool chemicals, acids and bases, thermometers, thermostats and poisons. Materials not accepted include industrial waste, radioactive materials, pathological and medical waste, pressurized gas cylinders, auto batteries and explosives. Paint, motor oil, propane tanks, fluorescent lamps and NiCd (rechargeable) batteries are collected regularly by many towns and may not be accepted at some collections. Latex paint is nonhazardous, and may be dried and disposed with trash. Bring chemicals in their original containers or labeled clearly as to their contents. Clean Harbors will conduct the collections.

Residents who turn in a toxic mercury thermometer or other mercury item may swap it for a digital thermometer. Visitors' mercury waste may be disposed but not swapped. Swaps sponsored by American Ref-Fuel at SEMASS or Mass. DEP.

For more detailed information and directions, call the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318. Claire Sullivan, Solid Waste Planner.

Big bats carry CHS softball team to 2-2 start

Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

In a stark contrast to last year, the bats have exploded early for the 2004 Cohasset High varsity softball team. With some fiery pitching and sturdy defense work, the Skippers may give us a very exciting season.

The first game ended with a 21-12 blowout victory over Norwell at Freedom Field on April 7th. Don't think for one moment this game was a walk in the park.

The Clippers banged in four runs in the top of the first inning. The Skippers struck back with a run of their own in the bottom half. Norwell continued to widen its lead to 6-1. Ouch!

Coach Deb Bostwick attributed the slide to "our having a hard time adapting to Norwell's slow pitching."

Then Cohasset came on like gangbusters. The Skippers answered with six runs of their own in the bottom of the second. They continued to march forward and never looked back. The Lady Skippers' version of Curt Schilling came in the form of Virginia Spofford, who struck out nine Clippers. Not too shabby for a Freshmen player.

Four Skippers - Casey Anderson, Cecelia Chapman, Rachel Doyle and Danielle Pinkus – all hit doubles to give Spofford the offensive support

Lady laxers find winning formula against Hanover

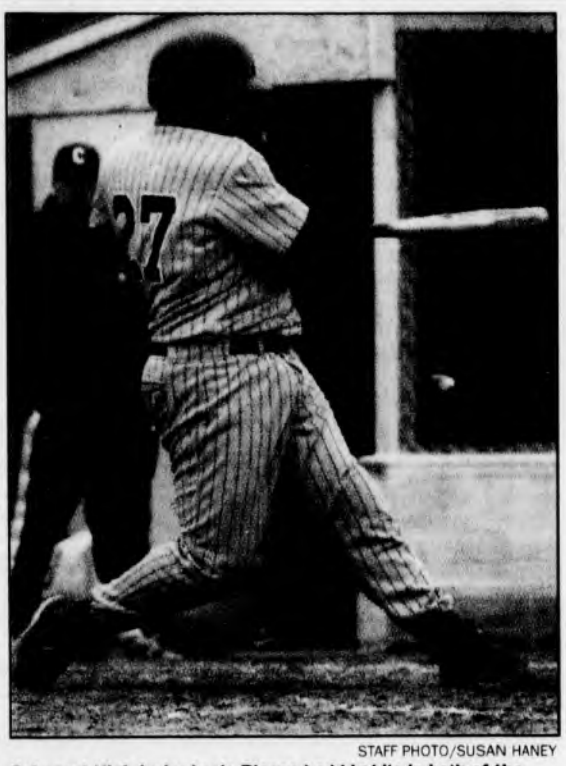
By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Sure, Hanover is a first year varsity program, but a win is a win at this point for the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team.

"I thought we came out aggressively and didn't play down," said third year Lady Skippers coach Torin Sweeney following the 13-1 win over Hanover on the road Monday. "We needed a win, and the girls came out fired up to get it."

Indeed. The Lady Skippers scored 10 times well before the first quarter horn sounded. This gave Sweeney a chance to swing in a few of his younger reserves for long stints and for his regulars to practice shooting with their off hands.

Senior co-captain Ashley Faber had two goals, as did junior standout Lauren Rizzotti and promising freshman Lindsay Durkin, as the Lady Skippers notched their first win after two losses. Seven other girls had solo tallies, as Sweeney urged his charges to share the wealth.



Even though Hanover may well be the least competitive team the Lady Skippers play this

Now that's a bit more like it.

After a couple of sloppy, ugly and, in all ways that count, better forgotten losses to Norwell and Hull to open the season, the Cohasset High baseball team finally showed some semblance of order this week by ripping off back to back wins over South Shore League rivals Abington and Mashpee.

The Skippers pulled their season's record to 2-2 with a 10-8 win over Abington on Monday, the team's first win over the perennially strong Green Wave in several years.

Bouncing back from a tough first mound outing, junior ace Ted Straughn struck out 14 to notch his first win, the last one for the final out of the game with the tying run on first base.

Junior catcher Louis Blanco knocked in two runs on three hits, including a triple. And senior right fielder Dan Tarpey had two hits, including a big double, and four RBI.

Skippers 10, Mashpee 7

Senior captain Mike Dooley, making just his second varsity pitching start, threw a complete game six-hitter to key the Skippers 10-7 win over SSL rival Mashpee on Saturday. Dooley struck out seven and also had a two-run scoring double to support his own cause.

Dooley's fellow senior captain, John Andrade, also came up big. He moved over from second base to take over for Dooley at shortstop, and

CHS tennis team stretches winning streak to 25

Twenty-five and counting.

That's the current winning streak for Cohasset girls tennis. After a 22-0 state championship season in 2003, the Skippers are off to an impressive 3-0 start this year. Their three matches against Duxbury, Mashpee and Abington have all been won in convincing 5-0 fashion.

When will they lose? Perhaps the better question is, will they lose? Either way, don't ask head coach Gigi Meehan.

"We just try to build a tournament team every year," she said during Monday's match at Abington. "Winning every match and winning the league is not necessary."

Despite being only three matches into the season, thanks to the South Shore's recent superb weather, it is safe to say that Cohasset will be making a return to the postseason. One of the big reasons why is their depth.

Followers of the team know what the likes of Liz Stone and Holly Graham can do. They are the top two singles players, and they showed why against Duxbury last Thursday, as they both lost only one game in their respective matches.

There are plenty of players behind them, however, who have been almost as dominant so far this season. Junior Rachel Garber played first singles last Thursday against Mashpee, a match that was the second leg of a double-

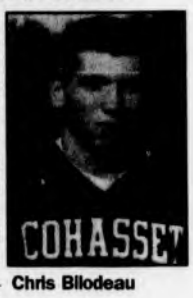
All-Scholastic boys basketball team

Cohasset's Bilodeau named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.



The competition for spots was heated, with eight of our 12 teams ringing up winning records and qualifying for the state tourney. We had three league champion teams in Silver Lake, Norwell and Rockland, with the former two earning the top seeds in the South Sectionals. What Rockland did with its second seed, though, was the big story in Marinerland. The Bulldogs sent revered and legendary head coach Bob Fisher into retirement with a Div. 3 state championship.

And to the victors go the spoils. Rockland leads the All-Scholastic parade, with four players earning top honors and two others Honorable Mentions.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 21, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top male basketball players in Marinerland for this honor:

Chris Bilodeau - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Cohasset

Chris Bilodeau

Chris earns his second straight Mariner All-Scholastic selection for basketball and third overall ...follows in the footsteps of older brothers TJ (CHS class of '01) and Matt ('02) as a Mariner All-Scholastic basketball selection...led the Skippers in the five big statistical categories this season: points (20.2 ppg), rebounds, steals, assists and minutes played...keyed the Skippers to a 10-10 regular season and first playoff berth in three years...solidly put together 6-2 athlete can score from anywhere on the floor...also a very good ballhandler who gets the ball where he wants to...two time South Shore League all-star...has worked hard to improve his defense...plays basketball year round for the prestigious Coastal Pops AAU team...winner of Mass. Basketball Association Academic Award...Honor Roll student is ranked top 20 in his class...also a sensational receiver/safety for the Cohasset High football team, twice earning SSL all-star honors, and once a Mariner All-Scholastic selection…the Patriot Ledger and Boston Herald All-Scholastic football selection this past fall has been chosen to play in the annual Shriner's Football Game this summer…not bad considering football is his second favorite sport… would like to play college basketball like older brother TJ (Harvard)… looking at NESCAC schools Bowdoin, Williams, Amherst and Middlebury…leaning toward majoring in Business….Cohasset coach Ron Ford: "Chris had an awesome year. He was a great leader on and off the floor. He sacrificed his individual game many times to help us win. He was just a total team player. He's also worked very hard to improve his all around game."

Joe Coppens - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Rockland

No question here…Was the leading scorer on the Bulldogs team for the third-straight season with an average 23.5 points per game…Scored a game-high 30 points in Rockland's 63-60 victory over New Leadership to win the Div. 3 State Championship…Added an average 9 rebounds and 5 assists per game…Compiled a 61-9 career record at Rockland (24-2), won four Patriot League titles, and finished with 1, career points…Also the RHS quarterback, Coppens made our All-Scholastic football team last fall…He spends the offseason playing with the CoastalPOPS AAU team. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "He wants the ball in pressure situations. He's a great defender and loves the challenge of taking on the opposing team's best player. He's the complete package."

Matt Schnider -
Senior (Capt.)
Point-guard - Rockland

Not the biggest guy on the court, but you wouldn't know it by the way Schnider plays…Quick, smart, and absolutely fearless, Schnider's chops at point-guard were unmatched this season…Scored 16 points in the Rockland's (24-2) win over New Leadership in the Div. 3 State Championship…Averaged 11 points per game and led the team in assists with an average 9 per game…Also a huge defensive weapon, the Patriot League All-star came up with several key steals this season, averaging 5 per game. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "Without question, he's the best ball handler in this area. No one could press us and his ability to see the court and penetrate pushed opposing defenses back. He broke teams very well and always hit the open man. He always believed he could do his job."

Kyle Lynch - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Rockland

To put it simply, Lynch's presence alone in the low post was something to be admired…Not a flashy, high-scorer, Lynch was instead a tough and gritty player who never failed to pull down the big board or put up the big hoop when needed most…Had a solid all-around game in the Div. 3 State Championship, scoring eight key points and pulling down 11 boards…Was the leading rebounder this season with an average 9.5 per game…Very solid defensively, Lynch helped hold some of the area's better players well below their averages despite giving up size at 5'11"…Also a football player at RHS, Lynch. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "He was our key defensive player inside and did so much. He always took on the tough man inside. He has a great work ethic, is a great leader, and has insurmountable pride."

Fred Tavares - Senior
Guard - Rockland

While not as offensively strong as in seasons past, Tavares' defense proved invaluable to the Bulldogs this season…Masterful at taking a charge, Tavares took a big one with 10.1 seconds remaining in the Div. 3 South Sectional semifinal against Spellman, icing 56-53 victory…Came up big defensively throughout the Bulldogs' tourney run, which ended with a Div. 3 State Championship…Quick hands were also one of his greatest assets as he came up with several big steals and averaged 3 per game…A Patriot League All-star. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "Fred has electrifying hands and is just so quick. He was not afraid to step up and take a hit for the team and was just a glove on defense. He became a great all around player and had a great tournament."

Tom Cuddihy - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Scituate

The three time Mariner All-Scholastic will graduate, far and away, as SHS's all-time leading scorer with 1,879 career points…in fact, he surpassed the old record during his junior year…finished second in the Eastern Mass scoring race this season (29.3 ppg) after topping that list as a junior…Cuddihy was a four year starter for a team that went 64-25 over that time (including a 6-4 postseason record)…was key to directing the Sailors to a 16-8 season, which included three postseason wins and a trip to the Div. 3 South Sectional semifinals, where they lost to top seed Norwell…led team in scoring the past three seasons…the sturdily put together 6-foot, 170-pound swingman scores in every conceivable way, from long range, short range, going strong and posting up…also an outstanding ballhandler and very good passer, a skill that was underutilized, as he was forced to be the Sailors go-to-guy…does not have blazing speed, but has a great first step and uses his body extremely well to protect the ball…also an extremely powerful leaper… Three-time Patriot League all-star…Patriot League co-Player of the Year along with fellow All-Scholastic Joe Coppens…Boston Globe All-Scholastic…also a league all-star in track…a star of the SHS freshman football team who stepped away from the gridiron his sophomore and junior years to concentrate more on basketball, but returned to football in his senior year…played AAU basketball for the Coastal Pops in the offseason through this past summer…enjoys bowling…will play college basketball and major in Criminal Justice, with an eye toward a future in law enforcement…looking at UMass-Lowell, Bridgewater State, Brandeis and Catholic University (Washington D.C.)… Scituate coach Matt Poirier: "Tom Cuddihy is a basketball player, period, the best basketball player to ever play at Scituate High. He brings a lot of skills, but it's also the way he approaches the game and his attitude. It's the sum of the parts that make him special."

Mike Bradley - Senior
Guard - Scituate

North Carolina import was the most pleasant surprise in the Patriot League this season…emerged quickly as the Sailors starting point guard and floorleader, as well as a much needed secondary scoring compliment to All-Scholastic teammate Tom Cuddihy…proved a key player in Sailors 16-8 season and run to the Div. 3 South Sectionals…led Sailors in assists (6 per game) and was second on the team in scoring (14 ppg), which was good for fifth in the Patriot League…PL all-star…not bad considering this was just his second season of high school basketball…a gifted ballhandler and excellent all around athlete…a good passer who saw the floor well…very acrobatic and creative in the air…finds ways to get to the basket, and is a good finisher…also has a nice touch on medium range jumpers…hit two huge 3-pointers in final two minutes of sectional quarterfinals win over Abington… a METCO student who lives in Dorchester… slender 5-10 guard has played off season basketball with the AAU-Boston Panthers, Charlotte Aces and Coastal Pops… also plays in Dorchester YMCA, and has done the 5-Star and Eastern Invitational camps…played Boston Raiders Youth Football and freshman football at SHS (before moving to North Carolina for a year)…volunteer Youth Basketball coach…volunteer to picket for his neighbor, Thomas Finneran…commended Honor Roll student the last two semesters of his junior year…enjoys movies, music, dance, art, PS2, reading and spending time with little brother Jawan (SHS freshman), both on and off the court…hopes to play college basketball… possibilities include Virginia State, Johnson C. Smith (N.C), Bridgewater State, Dean Junior College, Curry College, Emmanuel College, Central Conn. State and UMass…leaning toward majoring in Liberal Arts, Exercise Science or Physical Education…Scituate coach Matt Poirier: "Mike really helped take our team to another level this year. As the year went on, his assists went up and turnovers went down. The saddest thing about him is this was just his second year of basketball. I think of where he might be right now if he'd had four years. He has a huge upside, though, and a lot more basketball to play. And he's a great young man."

John Mohan - Junior
Guard - Norwell

This three-time Mariner All-Scholastic burst completely out of the shadow of 2000-point scorer Gerry Corcoran (Class of '03) to carry the Clippers to a 19-1 regular season and then all the way to the Div. 3 South title game, where they lost to eventual state champion Rockland…averaged 25-points and six assists per game…unanimous selection as South Shore League MVP…an excellent athlete who can simply do it all on the hardwood…plays bigger than his wiry 6-1, 175-pound frame suggests, and is also a superb ballhandler and passer…one criticism is that he's sometimes a little too unselfish, but he can score in virtually every conceivable way…a very good short, medium and long range shooter who can also post up, finish drives and convert off the offensive glass… three time SSL all-star…set NHS single-game scoring record vs. Hanover this season with 47 points…finished with well over 1,000 career points…varsity team went 79-15 during his four years as a key member…also a two time SSL and Mariner All-Scholastic for football as a quarterback and cornerback… a natural athlete with superb instincts…played AAU ball for the Coastal Pops in the offseason…plans to play basketball at Wheaton College (Illinois)…leaning toward majoring in Business… Norwell coach John Willis: "John might have had the best year of any player I've ever coached. That's tough to say because Dan McNamara (Class of '00) was such a great overall player and inside force, but John had the ability to just control the game. He handled the ball so well and calmed things down and made so many big plays when we needed them. He's just an incredibly talented player and a great competitor."

Marc Bowman - Senior
(Capt.)
Center - Norwell

A three year starter who emerged as a consistent scoring threat this year to compliment league MVP John Mohan, which proved key in the Clippers run to a 19-1 regular season and then all the way to the Div. 3 South title game…finished second to Mohan in the team scoring race with 12 points per game… earned his second straight South Shore League all-star selection…a dominant rebounder (14 per game) and shotblocker (over six per game)… slender 6-foot-7 center is also a master at drawing charges, finishing his career with over 100, including a high of eight in one game versus perennial state Div. 4 power North Cambridge Catholic…possesses great quickness for a man his size, as well as a very nice touch on medium range jumpers…has played off-season basketball the last three years for the prestigious Coastal Pops team…has also played football and run track at Norwell High…hopes to play college basketball and has been actively recruited by several colleges, but is leaning more toward a year of Prep School (Winchendon and Trinity-Paling are the leading candidates at this time)…would like to major in Education with an eye toward becoming a high school teacher and possibly even a coach one day…Norwell coach John Willis: "I think John had a sensational senior year. He really stepped up in all areas. He played through injuries and did whatever I asked of him or whatever the team needed."

Brent DiGiovanna -
Center - Hanover

This talented center is a three-year starter on the Indians squad and led the team to a respectable 16-8 finish, their best in a decade…Reached the 1,000-point plateau this season…Was the team's leading scorer and rebounder with an average 20 points and 12 boards per game…The Patriot League All-star scored 35 points and pulled down 25 rebounds in two games in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…Helped the team capture the Abington Tournament championship for the second-straight season…Plays AAU in the off-season with the CoastalPOPS…Also a baseball player at HHS. Hanover coach Mark Malloy: "We always try and run our offense through Brent. He has been unbelievable this year. He has a great work ethic and has come up big in big games. He's taken his game to the next level."

Mark Noonan -
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Hanover

Was second on the team in scoring with an average 15 points per game…Added eight rebounds per game…His performance in the low post helped the Indians compile their best record in 10 years at 16-8…Ended their season in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney, where Noonan scored 11 points in a second-round 78-72 loss to Seekonk…Was an important part of Hanover's trio of tall men, teaming with fellow All-Scholastic Brent DiGiovanna for one of the more productive inside games in the Patriot League…Received a nod to the PL All-star team this season after pacing the Indians to a 7-4 record.

Brian McSharry -
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Abington

A three-year starter on the Abington team, McSharry got his second South Shore League All-star nod this season after scoring an average 16.5 points per game…Had the difficult task of leading a young team as the only returning starter and the result was a16-6 overall mark, berth in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney, and second place finish in the SSL (9-3)…Scored 22 points and pulled down seven boards in a loss to Norwell and put up 21 points, 10 rebounds, and four steals in a victory over Bishop Stang in their own Green Wave tourney…Also the quarterback of the AHS football squad, McSharry was instrumental in the team's Div. 5 Super Bowl win two years ago…McSharry plans to attend Holy Cross in the fall. Abington coach Don Byron: "Brian is just a tremendous player and person to have in this program. He could do so many things out on the court that the team fed off his play both on offense and defense."

Bill Carey - Junior
Point-guard - Abington

Provided a solid and consistent one-two punch with McSharry from the point-guard position this season…A South Shore League All-star, Carey was among the leading scorers in the league with an average 16.1 points per game…The junior scored 21 points in a victory over Hopkinton in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney, helping the squad reach the quarterfinals…There, against Scituate, Carey pitched in 13 points and five steals despite a 72-66 loss…Put up 20 points, 8 assists and four treys in a thrilling victory over Bishop Stang in their own Green Wave tourney…Just a junior, Carey will be one of the top returning players next winter.

Jeff McLean - Senior
Forward - Hingham

Has been among the Patriot League's leading scorers over the past three seasons…Was the top scorer for the Harbormen (7-13, 4-8 PL) with an average 17 points per game…A PL All-star for the second-straight year, McLean scored 16 points in a victory over Middleboro on Senior Night…Was instrumental in two hard-fought games against Hanover, with one game decided by two points and the other dropped in overtime…A strong driver, McLean's effortless shooting touch was among his best assets on the court…Also a solid defender, McLean often drew the assignment of covering the opposing team's best player…Was a three year varsity player at HHS.

Despite first place finished by Cohasset High junior Nicole Whitney in the 400 (as seen here) and triple jump in last Thursday's season opener with Norwell, the Lady Skippers could not pull out the win.

Tracksters lapped at start

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It was a less than auspicious opening for the Cohasset High track teams last week, as both the girls and boys squads were swept by South Shore League rivals Norwell and Carver.

In a season opener that had been pushed back twice by rain, the Skippers squads opened on Wednesday at home with Norwell. The girls hung tough before falling by a 71-65 score, The boys, though, were flat out lapped, 92-33.

Things got worse on Monday in Carver, as two much bigger and deeper Crusaders squads proved most inhospitable hosts. The Cohasset boys were dropped, 73-25, while the girls were simply overwhelmed, 102-30.

Girls

If only Jenn Buckley had been allowed to compete in one more event versus Norwell…

The CHS senior captain maxed out her performance with maximum production, taking first place finishes in the mile, 2-mile, javelin and discus.

Junior Nicole Whitney also showed well to open the season, winning both the 400 and triple jump.

Buckley also won the mile (5:46), 2-mile (13:05) and javelin (92-5) in the loss to Carver, but that wasn't nearly enough this time around.

Boys

In the 92-33 loss to Norwell, Eric Belz won the 100 and Brent Daly was tops in the triple jump. Both also ran legs for the winning 4x100 relay team.

In the loss to Carver, Peter Bunstein won the triple jump (31-5).

Next Up

Both teams are now done until after April Vacation. They'll host South Shore League rival Hull on Tuesday, April 27 and travel to Rockland on Friday, April 30.

she needed. Coach Bostwick reflected on the total momentum shift of the second inning.

"Once we got our timing down, we broke the game wide open," she said. "We left the field with our confidence flying high."

Senior Caitlin Gontarz commented: "We didn't expect a lot going into this game. Our enthusiasm and team spirit, however, carried us to a win."

Hoping to carry the momentum of this game into a showdown at Hull the next day, the Lady Skippers walked right into a Pirate trap. The icy winds blowing across the field froze the Cohasset bats. At the end of the day, Cohasset fell short by a score of 7-1. It could have been worse. Last year, the umpires instituted the slaughter rule when Cohasset skidded to 17-zip loss. This year's Lady Skippers couldn't handle the heat on Hull's fastball, causing trouble on the offensive end.

"We just didn't have what it took to keep up with such a big team," said senior Caitlin Condon. "A combination of our weak offense, defensive errors and some fast Hull pitching cost us this match."

The Skippers returned to Freedom Field for their third game in three days, this time against the Mashpee Falcons. Unlike the prior to games, this one turned into a nail biter with the lead shifting throughout the game. Things looked bleak for the Lady Skippers with two out in the last inning and trailing by a 7-6 score. Freshman Christina Pinkus stepped up to the plate for the last at bat.

Coach Bostwick cautioned her to "only swing if you really want it." Christina spotted her pitch and gave it a ride to drive in the two runs necessary to win the game in a spectacular fashion.

"This game came down to sheer determination," reflected senior Caitlin Gontarz. "We wanted it the most, and got the win."

Deb Bostwick celebrated with her players in the exciting victory. "The Skippers showed willpower. I was so happy to see the girls after Christina's game winning hit," she said.

The win did not hide the fact there were 15 Cohasset errors. Commented the coach: "We lucked out to pull ourselves together in the last inning. The errors showed us we need to improve our mental game."

Unfortunately, the momentum from this game did not carry over into Monday, as star Abington pitcher AnnMarie Murphy tossed her third career no-hitter against the Lady Skippers in a 15-0 rout.

The team saw it's game at Carver on Tuesday postponed due to rain. The girls wil lplay their final game before April Vacation today at home (3:30 p.m., Freedom Field) versus South Shore Christian. The LAdy Skippers will get back to work after vacation on April 27 when they travel to Harwich.

season, Sweeney hopes this win might get his squad on a winning track.

"Honestly, I think we've been playing well, but just not getting many breaks," said Sweeney. "With a win under our belts, maybe the girls can loosen up a little bit and just keep it rolling."

The Lady Skippers opened the season with a tough luck 7-6 loss on the Cape to Sandwich on March 30 and then dropped a 17-11 decision to a big and very athletic Dartmouth team last Thursday.

Lisa Spirito paced the offense in the latter game with five goals. In that one, the Lady Skippers got down big quickly and trailed 8-2 at the half. A Spirito led charge helped them cut it to 10-8 early in the fourth quarter, but host Dartmouth opened it up from there to pull out big again.

"We just ran out of gas, plain and simple" explained Sweeney. "We put ourselves in a hole, and we didn't have the energy to dig all the way out.."

Sweeney figures today's game at New Bedford (4 p.m. start) will be a good test for his team.

"From what I've been able to find out, we should be pretty evenly matched with New Bedford," he said. "Hopefully, that'll bring out the best in the girls. A win here would be really big going into vacation."

The Lady Skippers will not play again until after vacation, when they travel to Scituate on April 27.

Coastal Stars Youth Hockey

Mite A

After gaining a berth in the Frozen Four of the South Shore Conference championship tournament by virtue of a win over the Seahawks, the Mite A Coastal Stars ran into a tenacious Braintree team and suffered a season-ending, 2-1 loss.

Both teams came out strong, but the Stars had the early advantage.

Colin Whelan, Will DeCoste, and Jonathan Spitz supported by the strong blue line play of Brian Smith and Andrew Geddes, applied constant pressure on the Braintree defense.

Tommy Dixon, Frank Lemieux, and Chris Cohen, with Jeremy Duchini and Ken Parnell on defense, continued the pressure but were denied by saves on several strong shots.

The pressure paid off with two seconds left in the first period when Jake McDonough stole the puck in the Braintree zone and shot on net. Will Golden battled for the rebound and poked it home for the lead.

Braintree began to assert itself early in the second, but Jared McCrystal stayed solid in front, and assisted in killing a Stars penalty with seven minutes left in the period.

Connor Maher was heroic in net, making saves on a point-blank shot and the rebound, and denying a breakaway.

Braintree evened the score with 2:12 left in the period when they rebounded yet another great save by Maher.

Both goalies kept their teams even, as Will Golden and Kevin McDougall were robbed on breaks and Maher made a series of seven or eight saves under a Braintree barrage.

Congratulations to Chris Cohen, Will DeCoste, Tom Dixon, Terrence Doonan, Jeremy Duchini, Andrew Geddes, Will Golden, Frank Lemieux, Connor Maher, Jared McCrystal, Jake McDonough, Kevin McDougall, Ken Parnell, Brian Smith, Jonathan Spitz, Colin Whelan, their coaches, and their fans for a marvelously successful and immensely enjoyable season. They are all stars.

A step in the right direction

CHS laxmen show signs of improvement in loss to Falmouth

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A win would have been nice, but Stu Curran feels a more important objective was met when his Cohasset High lacrosse team played perennial power Falmouth tough in an 8-7 loss last Thursday.

"The Falmouth game was a 100 percent improvement over the Martha's Vineyard game," said Curran, drawing a comparison to the season opening 7-6 loss 24 hours earlier at home. "This was one I think, at least, we can build on."

Senior goalie Nick Murphy came up big, making 16 saves at Falmouth, several of them true testers. Also noteworthy at the defensive end of the field was the way senior captain Conor Buick put the wraps on proclaimed Clippers scoring machine Colin Raposa.

"Conor was just immense," said Curran. "He really helped keep us in the game."

The first year CHS coach also lauded the defensive play of senior captain Mike Devine and freshman Jeff Brown.

It was Conor's kid brother, sophomore Aidan Buick, who keyed things for the Skippers at the opposite end of the field, as he notched the hat trick plus a helper. Junior Jake Previte chipped in with a goal and two assists, and midfielder Mark Davis had a goal and an assist. The other tallies came from the sticks of junior John Durkin and senior Ryan Tufts.

Previte, the top returning scorer from last year's team, has recently been tagged with nickname "The Plumber" in deference to all the pipes he's hit through the 0-2 start.

"I think we've got Jake down for hitting nine posts so far," said Curran. "He's creating some very good chances, but he's just really snakebitten right now. If just two of those shots are an inch or two over and find net, we might be 2-0 right now rather than 0-2. But that's the way it goes sometimes. The important thing is we're progressing as a team."

Mark Davis—AKA "Plumber's Helper"—has also hit a healthy share of iron.

"In general, we're aiming small and shooting small," said Curran, indicating the offensive problems went beyond the tough luck of Previte and Davis. "We have to start looking for that big white part of the net. It just seems like the shots are being directed rather than let rip."

Curran figures his team will be helped in Friday's showdown at home versus Barnstable (4 p.m.) by the return from injury of senior captain DeWayne Morris, an important midfield contributor.

Attack standout Mike Rasmussen, another senior captain, is expected back in another week or so from a broken wrist suffered at the end of the hockey season.

And another hockey casualty, senior Rob Carpenter (shoulder dislocation), was back on the field at Falmouth, though he was still at far from 100 percent. He's under orders from Curran to avoid going for ground balls for another couple of weeks.

"Getting these guys back healthy could be a big lift for us," said Curran. "You're talking about three pretty important seniors here.

"Barnstable is much improved, and that should be a good test to see how far we've come," said Curran of Friday's match up. "It would be nice if we could get that first win, but Barnstable's a much better team than the one we beat last year."

Unlike most of the CHS teams, the laxmen have a few games lined up during the April Vacation week. They'll host Scituate on Friday and be at St. John's-Shrewsbury on Saturday.

Skippers wash over Green Wave

Boys tennis team tops Abington to improve to 3-1

by Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys tennis team improved to 3-1 with an impressive 4-1 win over South Shore League rival Abington on Monday.

First year sophomore standout Dan Sullivan hung tough against a top Green Wave return man to pull out a straight sets 7-5, 7-5 win at first singles.

Sophomore Nils Sceery, another sophomore, had a somewhat easier time of it in his own straight sets win at second singles.

With freshman Kyle Datola falling at third singles, however, the team match came down to a couple of evenly contested doubles matches.

Fortunately, both Cohasset pairs were able to hang tough and pull out third set wins.

The sophomore-first year junior duo of Chris Pescatore and Brendan Michaud lost the first set at first singles, but then bounced back big with wins of 6-2, 6-4 to provide the Skippers with their deciding third match point.

Not to be outdone, the freshmen second doubles tandem of Chris Donze and Owen Stevenson also won a three setter.

"It wasn't a pretty win, but it was a good win," noted veteran CHS coach Kent Parrot. "Abington had some pretty tough players, but our guys found a way at the end. That's all that matters."

Parrot is hoping to take his third straight team to the postseason this spring. It is a young squad, with only one senior and nine freshmen, but it is also one loaded with talent.

"This is a team that should just keep getting better over the next several years," said Parrot. "And we have (middle school) coach Michelle Murphy to thank for a lot of that. She's sending some great talent up to the high school to both the girls and boys teams."

One match the young Skippers are really looking forward to is the April 29 rematch with 10 time defending league champion Norwell, whose streak of South Shore League wins currently stands at 106. The veteran laden Clippers topped the Skippers, 5-0, at Norwell last Wednesday, but all five matches were tightly contested. Parrot is counting for a better accounting from all seven players in his lineup in go round number two.

"That will just be a fun match," said Parrot. "Our kids shouldn't feel the pressure. If they go out and play the way they're capable of playing, this should be a very good match."

The highlight of Clippers-Skippers one was the two-plus hour three set battle between Sullivan and Norwell senior star Max Schenkein at first singles. Sullivan won the first set, but then Schenkein bounced back for a big 6-0 second set win. Sullivan buckled down in the deciding set, though, and was serving out the match with a 6-5 lead when Schenkein broke him and then served out for the win.

"That should be a great match," said Parrot. "Dan is eager to play Max again."

Skippers 3, Mashpee 2

The Skippers were forced to make a few lineup changes for this Saturday match, and they barely squeaked by the Falcons. The deciding point was notched by the freshmen doubles pair of Josh Duprey and Chris Ackley with a straight sets win.

The Skippers also beat Sacred Heart last Thursday in non-league play, 4-1, and saw their Tuesday meeting with Carver postponed due to rain.

Next Up

The CHS boys will now not play again until after the April Vacation. They'll get back into action with SSL rival Harwich at home on Tuesday, April 27.

header. She won, 6-3 and 6-1, and backed that up with a 6-1, 6-0 victory in number two singles Monday against Abington.

The number one doubles team of Courtney Caron and Chelsea Grossman earned victories in the Duxbury and Abington matches. They didn't lose a single game on Monday.

Katie Bolger made her season debut against Abington in number three singles, and walked away with a 6-0, 6-1 win, and appeared to be simply in a different class than her opponent.

Meehan said many of her players who did not see much action last year, such as Bolger, have noticeably improved their games.

"There is a big difference in her from last year," the coach said. "The kids really have gotten better. It's always exciting to see the kids you had last year and see the improvement that they have made."

Cohasset took advantage of the fact that Mashpee was playing a lot of eighth graders, and gave some of their reserves a chance to see match action. The team of Carrie Muir and Corey Evans took first doubles, 6-0 and 6-1, while the second team of Christine Muir (Carrie's twin sister) and Devin Smith lost only two games in their match.

Evans, a senior, also played second doubles with Emilie Sullivan against Duxbury and Abington. Their match with the Green Wave was a 6-2, 6-0 win, as both girls showed a well-rounded game, excelling along the baseline and at the net.

Against Mashpee, Emilie Shea and Emma Grinnell took second and third singles, respectively, with neither player dropping more than three games in a set.

Meehan says she has a group of about 14 players that she knows she can count on, with the others improving and getting to that same level.

"That's what I love about this team," she said. "It's not just about one kid. It's definitely team tennis."

acquitted himself quite well in the field, and also had a double and two stolen bases.

Junior Tim Pilczak had a double and a sacrifice fly and Tarpey added a big RBI double.

"This was the first semblance I've seen of us coming together as a team," said second year coach Al Gallotta, who feels his young squad was set back considerably by the bad weather.

Norwell 10, Skippers 6

Last Wednesday's season opener was marked (or some might say marred) for the Skippers by wild pitching and sloppy defense.

Skippers pitching walked eight Norwell batters and the defense committed seven errors behind this.

"Our defense was just atrocious," noted Gallotta. "You're not going to win too many games with those kind of numbers for errors and walks."

Junior Ted Straughn started strong on the mound, and the Skippers bats posted him to a 2-0 lead through three innings. However, the visiting Clippers took the lead for good with three in the fourth, and Straughn was knocked from the box in the fifth.

Norwell exploded for seven runs in the top of the seventh to extend its lead to 10-2. The Skippers battled back for four runs in their final at bat, but the rally ended there.

Hull 20, Skippers 5

The pitching went from bad to worse 24 hours earlier, as Cohasset hurlers combined to walk 16 Pirates batters and plunked two more.

"You're not going to win any games with that kind of lack of control," noted Gallotta. "That's a certainty. It was as ugly as it sounds."

Dooley had two hits in the game and Blanco had a two run single.

South Shore Sr. softball steps up to the plate for a fourth season

The South Shore Senior Softball League, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, opens its fourth season on Sunday, April 25. The team, open to all South Shore men aged 55 and older, meets at 10 am at the Central Park Field in Scituate.

Proving that age is no barrier to fun and athleticism, the "boys of summer" play up to three times a week in the league. Games are scheduled Sunday and Wednesday mornings at 10 am and Thursday evenings at 5 pm. There is also a traveling team available for interested players to compete in games across the state. Players can play once or three times a week, as they wish. The season runs well into the fall.

Kevin McLaughlin joins league founder Jim Hyde as league commissioner this year. Anyone interested in joining the league can call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 to obtain a registration form. Cost for the season is $30, which covers a shirt, hat and as much softball as one wants to play.

Flower show at Paul Pratt Library

On Wednesday, May 12, and Thursday, May 13, from noon to 5 p.m. the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold a "Standard Flower Show" at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road, Cohasset. The show is open to the public. Admission is free.

Held every other year, the theme of this year's flower show is "Literary License" due to the fact that it will be held at Cohasset's new library.

There will be three divisions: Special exhibits, Horticulture, and Design; including a minimum of five horticulture classifications with at least 20 exhibits overall; and a minimum of three design classifications with at least four entries required in each classification.

A Standard Flower Show is the official name for a flower show conforming to standards established by the National Garden Clubs, Inc., (NGC). It must meet all requirements of NGC including a written schedule the program describing what the NGC wants the flower show to include. The exhibits are judged and ribbons are awarded by a panel of three NGC accredited judges working under rules of the Standard System of Awarding.

Although a Standard Flower Show must follow rules, it is a fun effort for club members who exhibit and compete, as well as share their expertise and enjoyment of flowers with the community. In anticipation of this year's show and as a learning experience over the past two years, club members have been attending monthly flower design workshops and holding mini-flower shows.

Held every other year, the theme of this year's flower show is "Literary License" due to the fact that it will be held at Cohasset's new library.

Full scale preparation for this year's show began in May of 2003 when club members Vivian Bobo and Nancy Gilmore began writing the schedule and deciding on a theme. Club President Sally Avery appointed Maureen Byrne as General Chairman and committee heads were chosen. Nonetheless, the entire club participates as exhibitors, hostesses, clerks, staging, dismantling, cleanup, and refreshments.

PREPARING FOR SUMMER CAMP EXPERIENCE WITH YOUR CHILD

"Summer camp is more than a vacation for children," says Bruce Muchnick, Ed.D., a licensed psychologist who works extensively with day and resident camps. "As a parent, there are a few things to consider to increase the opportunity for a rewarding camp experience for your child." Some helpful suggestions provided by Dr. Muchnick and the American Camping Association of New England include:

Consider camp as a learning experience.
This is an opportunity for your child to explore a world bigger than his/her neighborhood and a chance for you and your child to practice "letting go." Letting go allows children to develop autonomy and a stronger sense of self, make new friends, develop new social skills, learn about teamwork, be creative, and more. This time also allows parents an opportunity to take care of themselves so that they will feel refreshed when their child returns home.

Prepare for camp together.
Decisions about camp — like where to go and what to pack — should be a joint venture, keeping in mind your child's maturity. If your child feels a part of the decision-making process, his/her chances of having a positive experience will improve.

Talk about concerns.
As the first day of camp nears, some children experience uneasiness about going away. Encourage your child to talk about these feelings rather than acting on what you think his/her feelings may be. Communicate confidence in your child's ability to handle being away from home.

Have realistic expectations.
Camp, like the rest of life, has high and low points. Not every moment will be filled with wonder and excitement. Encourage your child to have a reasonable and realistic view of camp. Discuss both the ups and downs your child may experience. Your child should not feel pressured to succeed at camp, either. The main purposes of camp are to relax and have fun.

High School students get volumes of support

Girls collect funds for encyclopedias

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The library is supposed to be a quiet place for reading and conducting research. However, last week, thanks to the bright idea of high school juniors Catherine Calorio, Jenn Murray, and Mary Silvia, the Deer Hill library was buzzing with excitement as surprise grab bags and chocolate lollypops were available in abundance.

Their goal is to raise $1,500 for a brand new set of 2004 World Book Encyclopedias.

Catherine Calorio, Jenn Murray, and Mary Silvia have begun selling chocolate lollypops and grab bags at Deer Hill to raise money for a new set of encyclopedias.

As part of a community service class the girls are taking at the high school, the three have been volunteering their help four days a week to librarian Marjorie Murphy, organizing books in the literacy closet and separating by alphabetical order. After spending so much time among the stacks, the girls became very familiar with the resources available to students, and realized the library only has one set of encyclopedias. Not only that, the encyclopedias date back to 1991, and until now, there had been no plans to replace them due to a lack of funds. Mary said the school's dilemma seemed to be the perfect project for the girls to take on.

"The library has one set that's kind of old," said Jenn, adding Deer Hill students have a unit based entirely on learning about encyclopedias and how to use them. However, there is only one set in the library to work with, and it's outdated. "There won't even be a full time librarian next year," she added, so the girls knew there would be no money to replace the books in the future.

During the Buttonwood Book Fair in the Deer Hill library, the girls set up a box with "grab bags" full of surprises like bouncy balls and pencils, that children could buy for $1, as well as homemade colored white chocolate lollypops for $1 each. They also had a jar full of candy, and for 25 cents, students could take a guess as to how much candy was inside, and the winner would get the candy. "Three girls won," said Jenn, and the candy was split evenly between them.

The girls spent some of their own money for supplies for the project, but have received donations as well. Because Jenn's mother owns a party shop, she was more than happy to donate surprises for the grab bags. The girls all got together on their own time to fill the bags, and they all made the chocolate lollypops together on the weekends.

In their first week alone, the girls raised $700, which they were ecstatic about. "We're almost half way there," said Catherine. Their goal is to raise $1,500 for a brand new set of 2004 World Book Encyclopedias. Just in case they don't meet their goal they are prepared with an alternative "back-up" set, but if that first week of sales is any indication, funding shouldn't be a problem.

The girls said all their grab bags have been sold, but there are still lollypops left which they plan on bringing to various school events for the remainder of the school year. They also said they hope to have one more week of grab bag sales toward the end of the year.

When the fund raiser is all said and done, the girls say they have plans to hang an engraved plaque over the new set of encyclopedias. Because it will truly be a community effort in the end, the plaque will say, "Donated from the Cohasset Community Service Project."

For more information or to make a donation to the encyclopedia fund, please call the Deer Hill School at (781) 383-6115.

Keith Lockhart, conductor

Boston Pops benefit for S.S. Art Center

This summer, the South Shore Art Center kicks off its 50th anniversary celebration with a benefit performance of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, Keith Lockhart conductor in Cohasset, July 31.

The concert brings the world-enowned artistry of Keith Lockhart and the Pops to the South Shore for the first time ever. The South Shore Music Circus' intimate summertime setting is the perfect place to enjoy the incomparable virtuosity of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra while supporting the education and exhibition programs at the South Shore Art Center. South Shore residents can enjoy the internationally acclaimed Boston Pops right in their own backyards.

A limited number of special ticket packages, which include receptions with maestro Keith Lockhart before and after the concert, can be purchased from the South Shore Art Center only. Call the Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org for more information about these gala benefit events. All other tickets for this Pops concert can be purchased via Ticketmaster at 617-931-2787 or in person at the Music Circus box office beginning Saturday, April 10. The performance is July 31, at 7 p.m. Tickets are priced at $101.25 and $90.25.

Yard sale for Our World Museum

On Saturday, April 24, at the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum an indoor/outdoor yard sale will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Quality used items are needed to sell. Your donation is tax-deductible and all proceeds go directly to the Museum.

Drop your items directly at the Museum on Tuesdays April 13, and April 20, between 9 a.m. and noon, Thursday April 15, between noon and 6 p.m., or Saturday, April 17, between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. The Museum is located in the back wing of the new Cohasset Library at 100 Sohier St., Cohasset. For information or directions, call the Museum at 781-383-3198."

Molasses flood subject of dinner

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold its Annual Spring Dinner on Sunday, April 25, at the Cohasset Harbor Resort, 124 Elm St. from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. The featured speaker will be Stephen Puleo, author of "Dark Tide: The Great Molasses Flood of 1919." Puleo, who is a former award-winning newspaper reporter, will recount the story of this 85 year old tragedy which took place on Jan. 15, 1919, when a steel tank containing 2.3 million gallons of molasses, ruptured and spilled its contents into the north end. Its 35 mile and hour path of destruction took with it the lives of 21 people, countless animals and part of the North End. This event is open to the public as well as society members.

The cost of the dinner and presentation is $31 for members and $36 for non-members. A cash bar will be available. Anyone interested in attending is asked to send a check, prior to April 20, to the Cohasset Historical Society, P.O. Box 627, Cohasset, MA, 02025. (781-383-1434). Include your name, address and choice of entrée (Chicken Francaise, sautéed batter-dipped boneless breast of chicken with white wine & lemon sauce with herbs and capers or Roasted Baby Cod with seasoned buttery crumbs in a garlic cream sauce).

Coffeehouse hosts an extraordinary duo

Hingham's Coffeehouse off the Square presents Susie Burke and David Surrette on Saturday, April 17, at 8 p.m.

Burke's complex voice and Surrette's string playing combine with extraordinary results.

They use their talents to interpret their own songs and some of the finest contemporary and traditional material. Those who have heard their last two outstanding performances know what to expect; others will be pleasantly surprised.

The Coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Parish House at 107 Main St., Hingham Square, just up from the Loring Hall Theatre. Admission is $10 at the door. An open microphone precedes the concert. A variety of coffees, teas, and desserts are available for 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee. For further information, call Jim Watson at (781) 749-1767.

Abbey plant sale

The Glastonbury Abbey Plant sale will be held from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Saturday, May 8.

A large selection of plants will be available for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Rt. 28) in Hingham.

Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses, bushes, fruits and vegetables will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local private gardens in the South Shore area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in Abbey gardens. Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who attend the sale. Proceeds go to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue beautification of the Abbey Grounds.

Dog obedience classes to start

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer dog obedience classes taught by Happy-Dog Training School.

Classes will be held on Monday evenings, on the Town Common, Cohasset, starting Monday, April 26, for Beginner classes at 6 p.m. and at 7 p.m. for Advanced. For all classes the fee is $100 for the five classes, one hour per week program. Dog owners are required to have their dogs' shots/inoculations up to date.

To register, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first call, first enrolled basis.

Jane Austen focus of library discussion

The Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books & Toys present Karen Joy Fowler discussing "The Jane Austen Book Club" on Sunday, May 2, at 2 p.m. at the Hingham Public Library.

"The Jane Austen Book Club" is the story of six Californians, self-described Janeites, who agree to meet for six months and discuss Jane Austen's six novels. Their personal favorites emerge, as their stories are told in tandem with discussions about Jane Austen's novels. Their in-depth knowledge about Jane's works make these parallel tales work.

For those whose memory about Austen is rusty, there is a reader's guide at the end of the book providing background for the unacquainted and a refresher for the Jane addicted.

Karen Joy Fowler is the author of two story collections and three novels, the third of which, Sister Noon, was a finalist for the PEN/Faulkner award. Everyone attending this author event featuring Karen Joy Fowler at the Hingham Public Library will be entered into a drawing for the novels of Jane Austen. One winner will be selected for each novel, "Emma", "Sense and Sensibility", "Mansfield Park", "Northanger Abbey", "Pride and Prejudice" and "Persuasion". Winners will be drawn at the event.

This is a free event and the public is most welcome. If you are unable to attend but would like a signed copy, call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 or order online at www.buttonwoodbooks.com

50th reunion planned

Early planning is under way for a reunion bringing together the members of the 1954 graduating class of Cohasset High School. As well, a search is under way for those who were members of that class but were separated prior to graduation and would like to join in on the festivities. Knowing that most of those who were associated with this class have left Cohasset, it is hoped that friends who still live in town will inform them, as soon as is possible of the plans for the event.

Individuals who have not already been informed of the event and want to be included in on all plans should contact Norman Jason, P.O. Box 46, Durham, CT 06422 or call 860-349-3438. Much work is still to be done but it is necessary to know who is going to be in attendance before plans can be completed.

Chamber gains momentum with events

Approximately 150 people attended the Cohasset Chamber's first "special event" of 2004, "An Evening with Loretta LaRoche." Following a cocktail hour and buffet dinner at The Red Lion Inn, LaRoche took the stage, regaling the crowd with hilarious anecdotes and one-liners to drive home her message that "Life is Short - Wear Your Party Pants!" Presented by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, the event was made possible by the Chamber's 2004 sponsors: Dunkin' Donuts, Pilgrim Co-operative Bank and Rockland Trust Company. Contributions received from Sovereign Bank, Conlon Chiropractic and Goodwin Graphics also helped to offset the cost of the evening.

The Board of Directors is committed to providing business support and opportunities for networking and making business contacts.

The Cohasset Chamber also sponsored a "Networking Night Out" at the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library in February which was well-attended despite a snowstorm that evening. The Board of Directors is committed to providing business support and opportunities for networking and making business contacts. They also publish a bi-monthly newsletter Minot Minutes which highlights business news and events in Cohasset and beyond. For membership information, visit the Chamber web site at www.cohassetchamber.org or call 781-383-1010 to request a Membership packet.

By working together we can help the future of our community outshine its proud history.

At Fleet, we all want to live and work in a community where education, culture, and the doors of opportunity are open to everyone, today and tomorrow. That's why each year we proudly commit millions of dollars to local programs that promote everything from the arts to revitalizing urban neighborhoods. And we're even prouder that our employees volunteer thousands of hours to non-profits to enrich the lives of others.

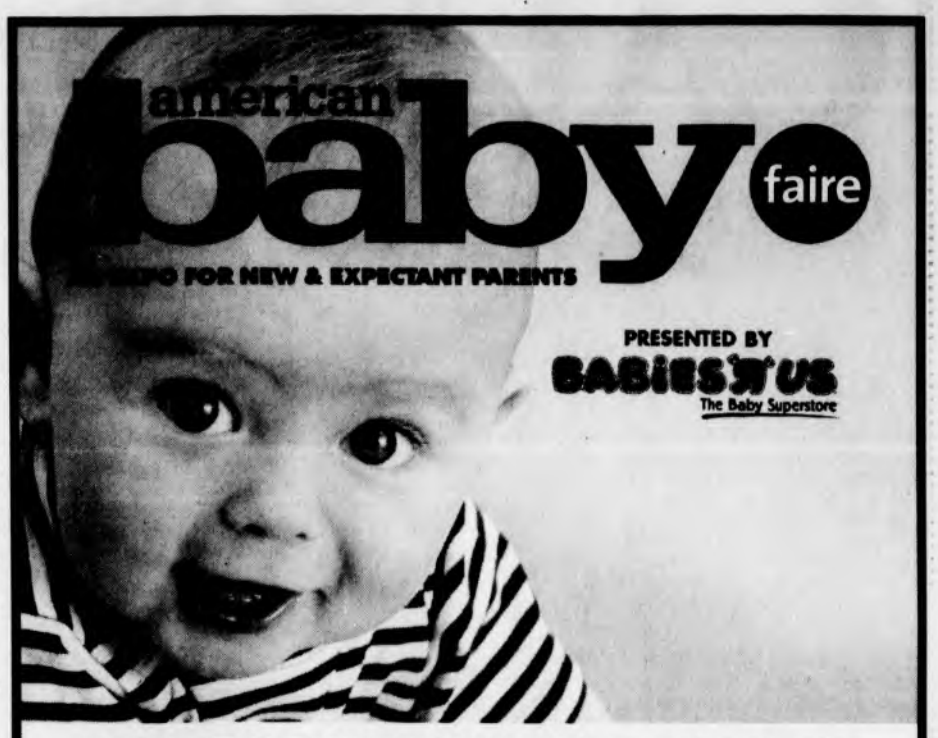
Water report highlights protective measures

The Water Commission has received a final Source Water Assessment Plan (SWAP) report from the state Department of Environmental Protection.

"This SWAP report is a good outline of the potential threats to Cohasset's public drinking water supply," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission, "and also provides a number of useful recommendation on how we can better protect our water supply."



The SWAP Report notes that the key issues for water supply protection are: protection of the Zone A area (400 feet from Lily Pond and the Reservoir and 200 feet from their tributaries), protecting our watershed land that is located outside Cohasset, public education, and control of residential uses that might contaminate the watershed.

The report commends the water system for mapping storm drains, conducting a study on the health of Lily Pond, and taking preliminary steps to develop a lawn care program.

The SWAP report recommends that the Water Department:

- Educate residents how to protect the water supply.
- Inspect the Zone A areas regularly.
- Coordinate responses to spills or accidents.
- Help local businesses to ensure the proper storage, handling, and disposal of hazardous materials.
- Monitor the progress on remedial actions on known hazardous material contamination sites.
- Implement our Surface Water Protection Plan.

"The Water Commission plans to implement all the SWAP recommendations," said McNabb. The complete 11-page SWAP report is available at the Water Department, on the Water Department website, www.cohassetwater.org, Town Hall, and at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. For more information, call the Water Dept. at 781-383-0057.

"I've been on the road almost nonstop since 1967," explained Havens, 63, by telephone recently. "In the beginning it was six days a week. A long time ago, I decided I didn't need to know where I was, only that I had been asked to come." On April 23, Havens will be honoring just such an invitation when he performs in concert at the Company Theatre in Norwell.

His memorable covers of Bob Dylan classics like "The Times They Are A-Changin" and "All Along the Watchtower" have even led some critics to herald Havens as "a virtual Dylan jukebox." He has also been praised for his soulful interpretations of "Here Comes The Sun," "Just Like A Woman," "Strawberry Fields Forever" and "Eleanor Rigby." Havens cemented his own place in music history with memorable appearances at the 1966 Newport Jazz Festival, the 1967 Monterey Jazz Festival, the 1968 Memorial Concert for Woody Guthrie at Carnegie Hall and, of course, the 1969 Woodstock festival in upstate New York. As that festival's opening act, he held center stage in front of a huge audience for nearly three hours, performing one well-received encore after another.

"Woodstock was a culmination for my generation," recalls Havens. "Rock and roll was our primal scream. The music and the way we shared it was like our newsletter. Our radicalness was out in the open for millions to see. We had finally moved above ground. It proved that we were all in this together, because we were being the Americans we had been taught to be." In the years since, Havens has remained happy — and busy — on the road. "Touring is not work, it is a privilege to be able to share what others have shared with me. I get to meet the people I live with on this planet, one to one."

(Richie Havens will perform in concert on April 23 at 8 PM at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell. For tickets and information, visit the box office or call 781/871-2787.)

Mom hopes to raise money to restore three teachers

School board says OK to effort

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When Barbara Buckley heard the budget for the schools would require the elimination of three elementary level teachers, even with an override of $400,000, she knew she couldn't sit back and watch that happen. To that end, she has begun a fund-raising campaign, asking 1,000 families in Cohasset to contribute $105 to the cause, which will raise the $105,000 it will take to pay those salaries for one more year.

While it is impossible to predict what the grand total of donations will be, Buckley said the initial response has been overwhelming as she has received $20,695 so far. With another $15,000, it will secure one teaching position for next year.

"There are three teachers retiring who are not going to be replaced," she said, adding by cutting those positions completely, class sizes will dramatically increase, and at the elementary level it is especially important to keep class size small. Even though a Prop. 2-1/2 override was passed at the ballot box this April, the $400,000 gained wasn't enough to offset a dramatic decrease in state aid. Prop. 2-1/2 is the state law that caps the amount a municipality can raise its tax levy from year to year, and with the override, 23 cents per $1,000 has been added to the tax rate.

While Buckley said she understands the money raised will only provide a solution for one year, it will at least buy the school committee some time to look into other options for the coming year. However, she is quick to point out her efforts, and the efforts of those who have joined her in supporting the project, are in no way criticizing the decisions that were made by any of the boards during the budget process. "I think they've done a fabulous job. It takes hundreds of hours to go through all the information, and I'm grateful to the selectmen and school committee for all the work they've done," she said. Buckley added however, that as a private citizen, she decided to take up her part of the responsibility, and presented her idea to the school committee last week.

"This was an idea that was brought to us and we're certainly not going to turn any money away," said school committee member Rick Flynn, adding the school committee is not responsible for raising funds. "We'd love to get those positions back in, but this by no means gives us a guarantee."

While private funds have been used in the past for projects such as a new language lab, raising private funds to cover line items in the budget is not typically done because there is always the question of how it will be funded the following year, Flynn said. When the language lab was constructed using private funds, that was a one-time cost and now that it's all said and done, "You have something to show for it," he said.

When formulating the budget this year, Flynn said it was important to consider that only so much can be cut in terms of support and supplies before it virtually makes it impossible for those teachers who are still employed to continue to do their job. While no one likes to see teachers cut, "We didn't want to eliminate too many peripheral things," and

Library leaching field is possible

Early perc tests look promising

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Preliminary percolation tests conducted behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library have indicated its soils may be the perfect leaching field for the senior housing complex proposed for the Cook property.

However, testing on this second site will cost more money and will take additional time, both of which town officials say Cohasset can't afford.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he approached the Trustees of the Library last Wednesday for their approval to dig on the library site, and said he was given unanimous support. The following day, he and Health Agent Joseph Godzik along with John Chessia of Coler and Colantonio witnessed the digging of the test pits. An employ-

Plush pet hotel is planned for former Chevy showroom

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Move over pampered people who like to spend a day in a spa or a vacation in an upscale hotel.

Now there's going to be a place for Spot or Tiger to be spoiled while you're at work or away on a cruise or other holiday excursion.

Arthur Logan, a Braintree resident, hopes to open a yet-to-be-named upscale daycare center and kennel for cats and dogs in part of the vacant Chevy dealership showroom off Route 3A near the Cohasset-Scituate line.

Logan has applied for a special permit for a change of use from the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals which will take the matter up on Tuesday, May 4.

Logan got the idea from his nephew Frank Charles, who is the mayor of St. Augustine, Fla. and an entrepreneur with a chain of successful "Pet Paradise Resort and Day Spas" in the sunshine state. Pet Paradise resorts' motto is "While you're away, your pet will play."

"When you open the front door it will not be like any other kennel. It will be paradise for an animal."
— Arthur Logan, entrepreneur

"It's taken off like wildfire," Logan said about his nephew's business which is expanding to Jacksonville Airport for added customer convenience.

"I've been working with my nephew in designing my kennel which will be upscale," Logan said. "I went down there to learn the business."

Logan hasn't decided what to call his kennel but is considering "Bark Avenue" which would be a play on words from Park Avenue, the tony street in New York City's Manhattan borough.

He explained the facility will be state-of-the-art with creature comforts including expansive cages for canine guests and trendy cat condos for visiting felines.

"When you open the front door it will not be like any other kennel," Logan said. "It will be paradise for an animal."

The business will also offer pet grooming and bathing, pet products such as sweaters and leashes, and cater to pet palates with different foods – all in a plush atmosphere.

The pet daycare and kennel will on the Scituate side of the former showroom and will use about 5,000 square feet of the building. The site is zoned highway business.

30-year leader tells her stories

By Samantha Brown

Sitting around a large, rectangular table, Louise Smullen is surrounded by girls eager to share stories of what it is like to be a Girl Scout. For Smullen, the stories bring back memories of the days when she was a Cohasset Girl Scout troop leader, and with 30 years experience under her belt, she too has a lot of stories to share.

Smullen was invited to have tea with the fourth-grade girls in Junior Girl Scout troops 4847 and 4776 last Friday to talk about what it means to be a Girl Scout and how things have changed. "You girls are making me want to be a Girl Scout again," she said, as she recalled stories of the girls she led

WRPC reactivated; three residents sought

John McNabb has notified selectmen that the water commission would like to reactivate the Water Resources Protection Committee. "We envision the role of this reactivated committee to meet quarterly as a forum where the various town boards with roles in water supply protection can meet, share ideas and coordinate their actions," McNabb stated.

He said the committee could be helpful with the lawn-care initiative, storm-water management, and implementation of the Surface Water Supply Protection Plan and SWAP (Source Water Assessment Plan) report that involves the activities of many different town boards.

The committee would be composed of representatives from the selectmen, water commission, board of health, conservation commission, planning board and open space committee who are nominated by their respective committees and appointed by selectmen, and three residents appointed by selectmen.

McNabb said he would like to convene the first meeting of the Water Resources Protection Committee in May or June. Interested residents should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Moore continues at planning board helm

At its April 7 meeting, the planning board reorganized reelecting Alfred S. Moore as chairman. Peter Pratt is vice chairman and Stuart Ivimey is clerk.

McNabb continues as chair of water board

John K. McNabb Jr. will continue as chairman of the water commission. Vice chairman is Glenn A. Pratt and Nathaniel Palmer was elected as clerk.

Assessors reorganize

Elsa J. Miller is chairman of the board of assessors and Mary E. Granville is clerk. The third member of the board is Michael C. Patrolia.

Chase to step down from facilities board

David J. Chase has indicted he will step down from the school facilities/building committee effective June. 1. If the selectmen should appoint someone sooner, he will make his resignation effective with that appointment, Chase stated in a letter to Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan.

Straits Pond Assoc. to meet on April 26

The Straits Pond Watershed Association will holds its quarterly meeting at 7:30 p.m., Monday, April 26 at Rob & Betsy Gilman's house, 15 Summit Ave., Hull. Meet Hull Selectmen Candidates and also hear updates on spring cleanup, forums, West Corner culvert, grants and SPWA nominations. Everyone welcome. 781.925.8659 / viaspeech@comcast.net

To donate for maintenance of Tree Swallow Bird Houses send checks to Straits Pond Watershed Association, 715B Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, MA 02025

Shea is chairman of school committee

Rick Shea will be taking over Rick Flynn's position as chairman of the school committee. Shea, who was appointed to fill a vacancy of the board until the Town Election, ran opposed for the one-year remaining of that term. Chartis Tebbetts will remain as the vice chairman.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Board of Assessors, April 27, 4 p.m.

Library Trustees, May 12, 7 p.m., at the library on Ripley Road

Selectmen, April 27, 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, April 26, 6 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, May 4, 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless indicated otherwise. Call the Town Clerk at 781-383-4100 for updates.

Roundhouse and Rocky Lane focus of MBTA meeting

The MBTA will conduct a meeting regarding the old Cohasset Roundhouse and Rocky Lane grade separator at 10 a.m., Wednesday, April 28 in the basement meeting room at Town Hall.

The purpose of the consultation sessions will be for the MBTA to present the current design proposals for these components of the project and discuss their potential impacts to cultural resources. Representatives of the towns as well as members of the public will then be given an opportunity to make comments on the design as proposed.

Tobacco vendors get high marks during April sting

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If teenagers under 18 try to buy tobacco products in Cohasset — there's a good chance they won't succeed.

In an effort to make sure local vendors who sell cigarettes comply with the law, the Hanover-based South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program in conjunction with area boards of health conducts tobacco stings periodically in area towns.

An April 12 compliance check in Cohasset netted zero sales to teens under 18.

"The Cohasset Board of Health believes that stings are important because they help us to enforce the non-smoking law," said Steve Bobo, chairman of the Board of Health.

During the prior sting Jan. 19 two stores were found to have sold a pack of cigarettes to a minor resulting in a public hearing followed by fines for the two retailers and temporary suspensions of their tobacco sales permits. Employees at both places were required to participate in an education program provided by the Collaborative.

The sting is part of an effort to enforce the state's tobacco sale, vending and distribution laws. No one under the age of 18 is allowed to purchase any type of tobacco product. However, there are no laws that prohibit those under 18 from using tobacco.

"Our goal is to limit youth access to tobacco by holding vendors responsible for selling a controlled product," says Jim Wells, director of the Collaborative, which is funded through the Mass. Tobacco Control Program that operates under the Department of Public Health. "State law requires anyone who sells tobacco to check the ID of anyone who looks under 27."

During the sting, which is conducted quarterly, an underage person goes into a store and asks for cigarettes. If he or she is turned away, the store is ruled in compliance and nothing further happens. If the store does sell, the minor and an adult educator from the Collaborative file a report and submit it to the local town Board of Health.

The Cohasset Board of Health wants to congratulate all the vendors who were in compliance. They include: Cohasset News, Tedeschi Food Stores, Village Wine, Mary Lou's, Cohasset Food Mart, KoKo Island, Cohasset Mobil Mart, Cohasset Plaza Liquors, Stop and Shop, CVS, Curtis Liquors, Leo's Exxon, Shaw's, and Walgreens.

Cohasset will have a joint hazardous waste collection day with Hull from 9 a.m.-1p.m., June 5 at a location to be announced.

Accepted materials include solvents, gasoline, motor oil mixtures and other automotive fluids, pesticides, photography chemicals, pool chemicals, acids and bases, thermometers, thermostats and poisons. Materials not accepted include industrial waste, radioactive materials, pathological and medical waste, pressurized gas cylinders, auto batteries and explosives. Paint, motor oil, propane tanks, fluorescent lamps and NiCd (rechargeable) batteries are collected regularly by many towns and may not be accepted at some collections. Latex paint is nonhazardous, and may be dried and disposed with trash. Bring chemicals in their original containers or labeled clearly as to their contents. Clean Harbors will conduct the collections.

Residents who turn in a toxic mercury thermometer or other mercury item may swap it for a digital thermometer. Visitors' mercury waste may be disposed but not swapped. Swaps sponsored by American Ref-Fuel at SEMASS or Mass. DEP.

For more detailed information and directions, call the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318. Claire Sullivan, Solid Waste Planner.

Welcome mat is out for Hingham's 1058th arrival

The Fourth of July is still 2-1/2 months away but on Friday afternoon, Hingham is going to feel as though Independence Day arrived a little early.

The 140-member 1058th Transportation Company of the Massachusetts National Guard is expected to return around 5 p.m., possibly earlier, to a sea of yellow ribbons, police escort and hundreds of flag-waving family, friends and ordinary citizens.

The soldiers put their feet on the ground in the U.S.A. on Patriots Day and after four days of "out processing" will load onto two or three buses Friday for the six-hour trip from Ft. Drum, N.Y. to Hingham.

Marion White, who will see her daughter Spc. Kathleen White for the first time in 15 months, is more than ecstatic if that much emotion is possible for one human being.

"We are so excited," White said Tuesday. "We are so happy they made it. The patriots came back on Patriots Day – how much better could that be? We had the Bruins and Celtics playoffs, the Boston Marathon and the 1058th coming home!"

The unit left in February 2003 for Ft. Drum, N.Y. and was deployed to Iraq a few weeks later. They've been stationed in the Tikrit area in the infamous Sunni Triangle. Early on, family members went up to six weeks without word about their soldiers. The 1058th also had to start from scratch building a camp and waiting for basics, such as shower facilities.

Bob Fournier, who is the building supervisor at the Hingham Armory on Central Street where the 1058th is based, says this homecoming will be different than the one 13 years ago after the first Gulf War.

"This was Gulf War, Sr.," said Fournier, who served with the 1058th in Operation Desert Storm. "We were in Gulf War, Jr. – it's a whole different shooting match.

"It's a lot more involved, there's a lot more going on."

Plans are for the 1058th members to have a State Police escort to Hingham where they will be joined by the Hingham police at Queen Ann's Corner. Capt. Taylor Mills said Hingham police will be out in force. He said the dispatch center at 781-749-1212 would welcome calls if residents want updates about the 1058th's expected arrival time so they can stand along Main Street and welcome the soldiers home.

There will be a short ceremony at the Armory once the troops arrive after which their commander will dismiss them. Then it will likely be pure pandemonium as the soldiers reunite with their loved ones.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, had a message honoring the return of the 1058th read into the official legislative record at the Statehouse Tuesday when the Senate adjourned.

"They served their country with honor and distinction while serving in some of the most volatile areas of Iraq," Hedlund said. "Their dedication to our country will always be remembered."

During a break from tying yellow ribbons to the trees around the Armory on Tuesday, Mary McHugh of Braintree said her son, Spc. David McHugh turned 28 last month. A school bus driver in Braintree, McHugh said she kept two photographs of her son on the visor so "I felt I had him there with me."

"I talked to him yesterday and he's relieved to be back," she said.

Kathi Hillman of Scituate, whose son Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Hillman is coming home, described her emotions as "very relieved, very happy." Sgt. Hillman's son Jonathan, 18 months, was only a few months old when he was deployed. She said her daughter-in-law Sarah keeps telling Jonathan his father is coming home.

"He doesn't know his daddy but he knows his daddy is coming home," said Hillman.

Kathy Wasik of Bridgewater, who teaches in Hull, can't wait to see her son, Spc. Greg Wasik.

"This is awesome, fantastic – I can't wait to get our lives back to normal," she said, as cars driving past the Armory Tuesday honked in support of all the yellow ribbons.

Janet O'Connor of Plymouth, whose son-in-law is Spc. Thomas Jones, said Friday will be a little bittersweet. She will miss the camaraderie of the 1058th family support group. "We've done so much together," she said.

Then White, who leads the support group, noted the families are organizing a dinner-dance at Lantana June 11 for the troops and their loved ones. The families are also planning to be part of this year's Hingham Fourth of July Parade but with one important difference from last year— their soldiers will be able to march beside them.

"I want everyone to see who I was marching for last year," said White. Last year many of the family members carried pictures of their soldiers or held posters urging continued support for the troops.

Then the women recalled how hot it was last July Fourth.

"But we couldn't complain," White said. "It was much hotter in Iraq."

Capt. Mills said police will block off part of Central Street for the 1058th homecoming. Call 781-749-1212 for updates.

have it negatively impact the rest of the staff.

While Buckley said she has heard people around town are concerned with the precedent her fund-raising could set, by making it an option to privately fund items that should be covered in the budget, "To me, the dangerous precedent is in standing by and watching three teachers be cut and not doing something about it."

"People feel the need to react," she said, adding it's not just the parents of the students who are in the elementary grades that will be affected, it's the parents of preschoolers who want to ensure when their child begins elementary school there will still be small class sizes. She said still others have already sent their children through the Cohasset school system and are very grateful for the education they received and are happy to say "thanks," with a donation.

While Flynn said the school committee will be very happy if the $105,000 goal is met, it isn't counting on anything just yet. "Fund raising for public schools is not an easy task," he said. He added his committee is neither supporting nor discouraging the fund raising efforts, and that "People have a right to do what they want with their money and they are under no obligation to donate."

Buckley said the money is being donated through the Cohasset Educational Foundation, which allows it to have a tax exempt status. She added 100 percent of the funding collected will be used specifically for the teachers' salaries, as there is still money left in the municipal budget to cover benefit costs for one year. "I felt good giving the check. I have two kids in these grades and I felt good knowing every penny would be going to support the cause," she said.

While it is known the teachers cut will be for the elementary schools, it is still unclear as to exactly which grades will be affected. Because the Osgood School and Deer Hill School both teach elementary level students, the principals of both schools will make the final decisions over the summer on which grade levels would be least affected by the cuts, should they still be necessary.

For more information, please call Barbara Buckley (before 9 p.m.) at (781) 383-8261. Buckley will be accepting donations until the end of the school year, and checks should be made out to the Cohasset Educational Foundation. Checks can be sent to Buckley's home address at 272 North Main St.

A former resident of Scituate and Marshfield, Logan said he researched the demographics of the area and found there is a need for this type of facility.

Logan, who is retired, said he wanted something to do. He said Cohasset is a great location.

"The business is upscale and I want to deal with people who are demanding and want the best care for their pets," he said.

Initially the staff will consist of Logan and three others, and could increase depending on how quickly the business grows. He said the business is a perfect fit for him. "I love animals," he says.

Northland files sewer application

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"This is a little bit different because it is a town-sponsored project."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

In an effort to get into the sewer queue, Jack Dawley of Northland Residential said his company, which will be developing the Cook estate, has filed an application for a sewer service connection in Cohasset.

"It's not our first choice, given all the politics," said Dawley, but added just in case capacity can be found or permits granted, "we wouldn't be the last man out."

Currently, two other developers are suing the town over sewer connections. The developers of Cedarmere, a 105-unit senior housing project, and the first project to file under the town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, filed its suit Nov. 25, 2003. They claim their development has the right to a sewer hookup because there is enough capacity to accommodate for the project, even though the sewer commission and its engineers say there is not.

The sewer commission said it would like to wait a few more years to see how the wastewater treatment plant handles the current properties being connected before adding anyone else. The Cedarmere developers say they have provided a no-impact proposal, because they would upgrade the system to accommodate for all they would add.

Avalon, a 200-unit 40B project slated to be built off Route 3A, has filed a motion to intervene as of right, and has joined the Cedarmere suit. Avalon never filed a sewer service application because developers were told from the beginning there is no capacity, and they took that in good faith and began pursuing alternate means of wastewater disposal. Cedarmere filed its suit first, followed by Northland, then Avalon. Avalon filed its comprehensive permit first and acted in good faith in pursuing alternative wastewater options, so it is unclear who would be given a connection first, should that become a viable option.

Town Counsel is opposed to the Avalon suit, stating the development does not meet the criteria to intervene. In general, to join with another lawsuit, the intervenor must have an interest in the subject matter of the original suit, and the town says because Avalon never filed for a sewer application, the two cannot conjoin.

Because the town is allowing Northland, the developers of the Cook estate, to look off-site for wastewater solutions, it opens up the question of whether Avalon or Cedarmere could do the same. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he doesn't believe allowing the Cook property to look off-site will set any kind of precedent for the future.

"This is a little bit different because it is a town-sponsored project," he said, adding even though the project will be built, owned, and maintained by a private developer, it was "approved at Town Meeting," and the town has been responsible for all the negotiations.

Early perc tests look promising

ee of the Department of Public Works dug the holes, which cost $500, and Northland, the company hired to build the development, will cover that cost.

"We dug at the library and there is beautiful material," said Chessia. Because he conducted a series of soil tests on the Cook property itself, he is very familiar with that site's soil and said the difference between what was found at the library and the Cook site is "unbelievable."

"It's night and day," he said, adding at the library the soil is basically gravel and sand. He said perfect soil conditions on any site can be indicated when water dumped into a hole soaks into the soil as quickly as it is poured, and that is essentially what happened at the library.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is located on the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street, and is seven-tenths of a mile away from the Cook property. In order to drain wastewater from the Cook site to the library, pipes would have to be laid down Sohier Street — which would mean digging up the road. However, Chessia said the difference in soil is so drastic, having a leaching field at the library looks like a promising alternative.

"It looks to me that we could fit what we need under the parking lot and a little next to it under the field," he said.

Further testing will have to be conducted before the site is deemed suitable for taking on the wastewater the Cook property will discharge. Preliminary perc testing on the Cook site looked promising as well, but the results of some hydrogeologic testing indicated the soil was not suitable as the depth increased. Hydrogeologic testing is the first step to obtaining a groundwater discharge permit from the state Department of Environmental Protection. Any project which discharges more than 10,000 gallons of wastewater per day is required to obtain the permit. The Cook property will generate roughly 14,000 gallons per day.

While he isn't sure which company will perform the next tests, Chessia said he would be more than happy to do it. Testing the first time around cost the town $25,000, which was paid for through a reserve fund transfer.

Jack Dawley from Northland Residential, said at this point he is not sure how the payment for various services will be handled, but said his company paid for the first round of tests on the library site and he expects there will be more costs incurred along the way.

"We're committed to evaluating every opportunity with the town," he said. While it is impossible to predict what will happen, Dawley said he did expect there would be a "resulting change in the deal" to compensate for costs incurred — including additional tests, digging up Sohier Street, and laying the pipes, should that become a viable alternative for the project. Dawley reiterated that at this stage, his company is willing to work with the town to find a solution, but everything is subject to negotiations.

Last fall, voters at the Fall Special Town meeting allocated $4.5 million for the purchase of the 22-acre parcel of Cook-owned property, which has been combined with the adjacent 8.7 acres of town property, and marketed to developers. The town will sell the combined parcels to Northland Residential for $5.425 million for senior housing. There will be a double closing, transferring the property from the Cooks to the developer, and therefore money will not be expended by the town. Because the town has a closing deadline of October, time is of the essence.

In determining whether the library site can accommodate the wastewater for the Cook site, there will have to be DEP and board of health approvals because the site is within the Water Resource District. Laying the pipes will also mean crossing the tracks for the Greenbush line, and Haddad said he will be in contact with the MBTA to see if it would be possible to install sleeves under the tracks to accommodate for the pipes, should that become necessary.

PHOTOS/SAMANTHA BROWN

Preliminary percolation tests were conducted behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, to see if it might be able to serve as the leaching field for the Cook property.

If the soil can support it, a leaching field for the Cook property could be put under the parking lot and field of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Long-time troop leader shares stories about scouting

through the program years ago.

When Smullen was growing up, Girl Scouts didn't exist. "My sister was eight years younger than me, and she was a Girl Scout," said Smullen, but in 1929 when she would have been 10 years old, only Boy Scouts was offered. "Can you imagine that?" she asked the girls.

However, Smullen had her chance to participate as a troop leader, and back then she said it was not unusual to have 30 girls in a troop, which is in great contrast to the typical 10 girl troop of today. But Smullen didn't have to lead the troop alone. With 30 girls, she was given an assistant scout leader to help, and many mothers would lend their time as well. "In those days, all mothers were homemakers," said Smullen, adding there were usually two or three mothers helping out at each meeting. In addition, meetings were much longer than they are now, ranging from two to three hours rather than the typical one hour meeting of today.

Smullen said the girls in her troop started as Brownies when they were in the second or third grade, but there were no programs for girls younger than that. "We never heard of Daisies," she said. Smullen added her scouts almost always had a game to begin the meeting and a flag ceremony to close. "The late comers might miss the game, which broke their hearts, but at least they wouldn't miss the meeting," she said.

One of Smullen's favorite outings with her scouts was taking them camping. "I took my last camping trip in 1990," she said. During camping trips, she said she and the other troop leaders would sleep on cots in their own platform tents, which had a wooden floor, and the girls would have their own tents. She said her girls also slept over on the USS Massachusetts in Battleship Cove, which they loved. She said the girls took a tour of the submarines and slept in triple-decker bunks and were awakened by a trumpet sounding in the morning.

Smullen said many of the patches the girls complete today are similar to those girls in her troops used to earn, such as first aid, pen pals and taking care of pets. However, she said the personal health patch her girls used to earn would probably not be something the girls of today would complete. Her girls would learn how to put on makeup the right way, and a hairdresser would pay a visit to show them how to cut hair as well as "how to wear it becomingly." Girls were also taught which colors looked best on them as well as how to do their nails. Smullen said today, girls complete badges based on technology and science, including computers, which weren't around when her girls were scouting.

Each year, Smullen said she tried to incorporate more and more activities for the girls to help broaden their range of skills, showing the dedication she had for her troops. "They learned to be self-reliant," she said, adding they learned how to take care of themselves and make the best use of their resources under her watch. "At the end of every year, I'd tell myself I'd do better the next year, and I think I did."

Back from Iraq – Hingham soldier reflects on experience

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's hard to imagine Elizabeth Burham who was wearing a jeans skirt and bright pink top on Monday clad in BDUs and army boots just a few short weeks ago.

BDUs – or battle dress uniform – along with IBA (individual body armor), and a Kevlar or Army helmet is the dress that Burnham and upwards of 135,000 of her colleagues in the US Armed Forces wear every day on the other side of the world in Iraq.

Burnham, who after a 12-month stint in the Kurdish part of northern Iraq, is now able to relax in the living room of the home she shares with her parents, John and Debbie Burnham, on Thaxter Street in Hingham. She is an elementary school teacher with a master's degree.

What the 37 year old faced in Iraq makes the reality show Fear Factor look like a cakewalk. Burnham no longer has to worry about venomous camel spiders as big as a fist, rats in the ceiling of the room she shared with the only other woman in her unit, daytime temperatures of 120 degrees or more, and the ever-present concern about personal security and the threat of attack by guerilla fighters who crossed the Iranian border.

Burnham, a "weekend warrior" who joined the US Army Reserves with the goal of paying for graduate school, was called up for additional training in January of 2003, activated that February, and deployed to Iraq in March.

Proudly patriotic, Burnham — whose brother Peter served in Iraq with a different unit and has just returned to his home in Michigan — could be the poster child for the modern Army.

For one thing, she's female, blonde, blue-eyed, smart and educated. She is also articulate about the mission she served and the challenges her fellow troops face — not only in Iraq — but here at home as the media continuously presents the public with, what is in her view, an overly negative perspective on the war.

"People ask me why we're there," says Burnham, who finds that question frustrating. "The bottom line is we are there and yes, we should be there.

"We are sending a message to the rest of the Muslim world that they do not have to live in tyranny."

Burnham, who lived in Irbil and Sulaymaniyah, saw firsthand the effects of the wrath Saddam Hussein had for the Kurdish people, who reside in mud huts despite living in a country which has huge oil reserves and was run by a despot boasting dozens of palaces.

"The Kurds are pro-American and are so happy we are there," says Burnham, who was constantly asked to dinner at local homes. "They couldn't do enough and have nothing to give but would give you everything they have."

Although she didn't face the "scary situations" that her brother did further south in the infamous Sunni Triangle, she never went anywhere without her weapon and her unit was provided with intelligence updates about potential terrorist threats.

Burnham, who was promoted to sergeant in October and worked in Civil Affairs helping the locals with their schools and training teachers, will be forever touched by the plight of the Kurds.

"Seeing the poor in this country which has such potential for wealth was heartbreaking," she says. "Everyone I met was affected by Saddam either with a missing, killed or tortured relative — it took your breath away learning some of the things they had suffered."

She also witnessed the Kurds returning home with a truckload of bodies found in mass graves that included women and children. In the late 1980s more than 180,000 Kurds disappeared after the Iraqi army destroyed 4,000 villages. The Iraqi airforce also used chemical bombs on the town of Helebja killing 5,000 and maiming thousands of others.

Americans stand out in Iraq and Burnham, with her blonde hair, even more so. She said the Kurds treat Americans like celebrities and while that was flattering, it could also become tiring at times.

"We had to be really patient with that," she recalls. The camp where her unit lived was guarded by Kurdish soldiers, dubbed the Peshmerga and affectionately called "The Pesh," by the Americans. She explained although the Kurds have been virtually autonomous since the end of the first Gulf War, that didn't stop Saddam Hussein from tormenting them. The day Saddam was captured; the Kurds were jubilant and fired their guns into the air for hours. "Some thought if he was never found, he would come back and haunt them," she says.

A fourth-grade teacher in Medfield, Burnham joined the Reserves three years ago because she "thought I'd been good at it and would do well.

"I also felt it would be the right thing to do. I've always been patriotic and proud to be an American."

Burnham, who has worked part-time at the Cohasset Golf Club as a waitress and bartender for about seven years, will return to her teaching position in the fall with a lot of stories to tell her students.

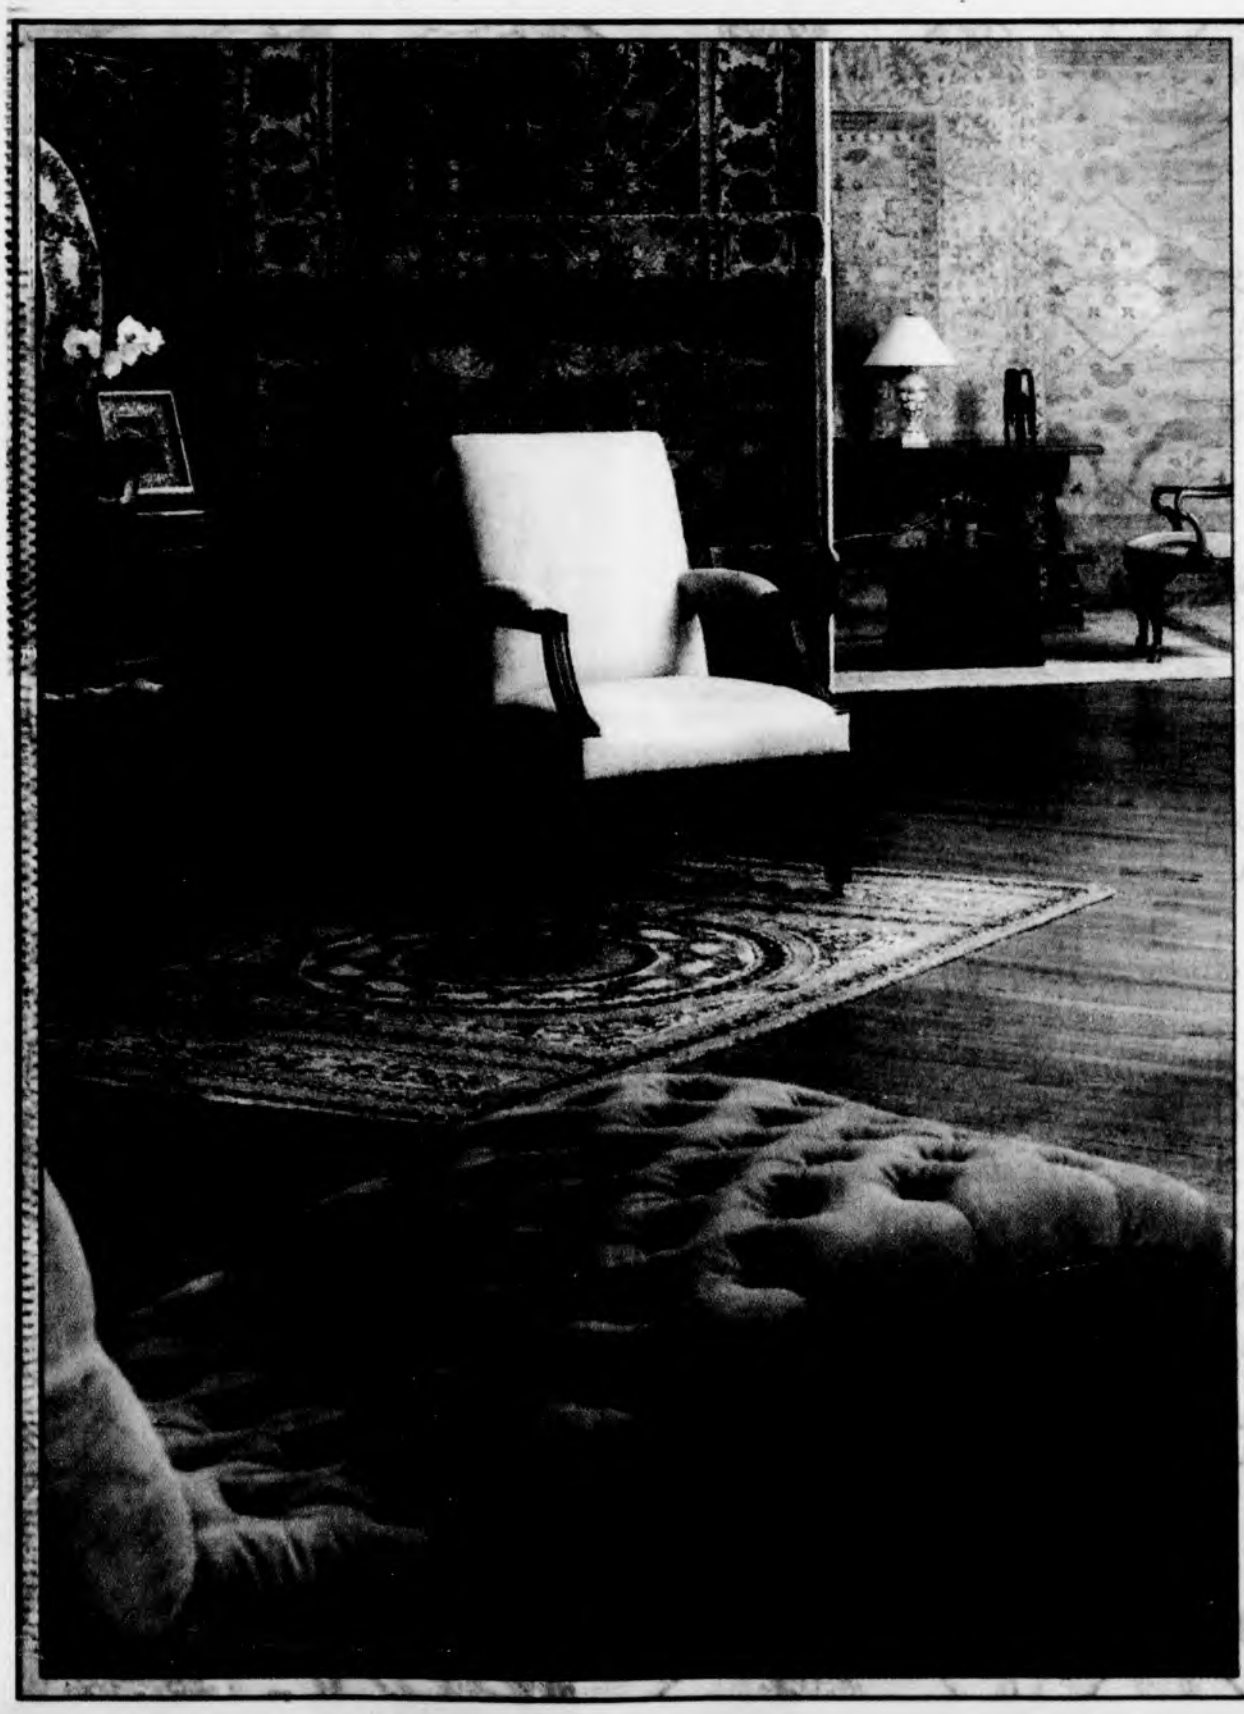
In the meantime, she is readjusting to life in the U.S.A, which she describes as the "greatest country in the world."

"I'm happy to be home," she says. "I'm used to living in a setting where you didn't have the little things in life we take for granted and had to depend on other people — you couldn't just get into your car and drive off by yourself.

"In Iraq we traveled with a three-vehicle convoy and everyone was armed."

Burnham says the Kurds aren't the only Iraqis who appreciate Americans. Driving in a convoy south to Kuwait to prepare to fly home, Burnham saw Arabs walking along the side of the road.

"They would wave and blow kisses and say, 'George Bush' with a thumbs up," she recalls. "There is so much good going on in Iraq, so many positive changes. Every school and every university is open, there is one currency and the list goes on."



An Iraqi woman presents Sgt. Elizabeth Burnham with one of her paintings as a gift at the College of Administration and Economy Art Exhibit in Irbil. Elizabeth works part-time at the Cohasset Golf Club.

Sgt. Elizabeth Burnham of Hingham stands on the rocky terrain in northern Iraq which is completely different from the rolling fairways of the Cohasset Golf Club where she works part-time.

Passionate about her support for her fellow soldiers, she thinks the cause is a just one.

"I'm always asked if I would do it again knowing what I know now and I would," she says. "We are so lucky in America where we live day to day — we don't appreciate what it was like to live in Iraq under Saddam and say something one day, and the next day never be seen again."

Annual art exhibit encourages participants to play with their food

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

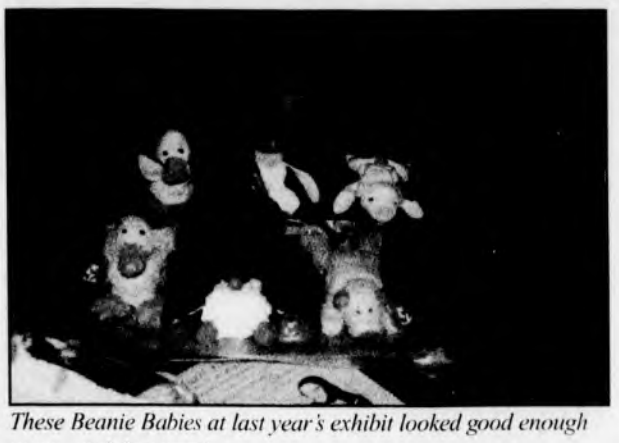
If you can eat it, you can use it. That's the rule participants in the Cohasset High School edible art exhibit must follow when dreaming up their entirely edible masterpieces, which will be on display — and eaten — at the high school cafeteria Thursday April 29 from 6:30-8 p.m.

While the idea is geared toward students in all three Cohasset schools, high school art teacher Nina Berkowitz who is coordinating the exhibit, said everyone in town is encouraged to participate.

"It's a fun way to do something that's not traditional art."
— Nina Berkowitz, art teacher

"I got the idea at a conference I attended," said Berkowitz. A teacher from Maryland held a similar exhibit in her school and Berkowitz thought bringing it to Cohasset would be a great way to try creating something new and unusual. The event is now in its third year. Because food is not typically used as a medium for creating art, Berkowitz said it sets this exhibit apart from any other.

"It's a fun way to do something that's not traditional art," she said, adding a week before the exhibit, she has the students in her classes work with food. Those that are participating in the exhibit can work on their projects and experiment to see what works best.



Because it is open to everyone in town, Berkowitz said it provides the opportunity for artists from every age group to get to know each other better. As a teacher at the high school, she enjoys meeting the younger students who will advance through the grades to take her classes one day.

Berkowitz said while she enjoys seeing what her current and future students create, it's also exciting to see what adults come up with. "They tend to not use candy," which students often do, she said. Aside from candy, one of the most commonly used materials with students are Rice Krispies treats. "They mold really well, " said Berkowitz adding some of the winning entries from students in the past two years have been Rice Krispies creations.

But the artwork made by adults has proven they tend to think more outside the box. Berkowitz said her sister entered a piece made entirely out of Cheez-It crackers and cheese. She burnt half of the crackers to make a brown and orange Cheeze-It chess board, and carved the cheese into playing pieces. "Adults tend to do stuff no one has seen before," said Berkowitz.

In an effort to expand the range of artists participating in the exhibit, Berkowitz said she has dropped off fliers at the Senior Center and the South Shore Art Center. "I'm also trying to get some local artists that I know," to participate, she said.

Contestants are asked to create artwork that is safe for human consumption, as all artwork becomes the property of the exhibit after judging and those who attend will eat the art. However, nothing will be eaten if it is deemed unhealthy after a few hours without refrigeration. Artwork may either created by an individual or may be a collaborative piece.

These Beanie Babies at last year's exhibit looked good enough to eat, and they were!

There will be two categories for judging — original artwork and copies of artwork. Artists are responsible for setting up their own piece for viewing at 6:30 on the night of the exhibit. There will also be entertainment, as the jazz combo and another high school band will both play at the event.

Prizes will be awarded for first place in two categories, spanning four divisions. First place for both original artwork and copies of art will be awarded in the elementary school, middle school, high school, and adult categories. The PSO has given Berkowitz funding to help pay for the prizes, which will consist of gift certificates for local merchants and restaurants. Berkowitz said each prize will be more than enough for winners to share, should they enter a collaborative piece.

For more information or to register to compete, please contact Nina Berkowitz at (781) 383-6100 X264, or via e-mail at nberkowitz@cohassetk12.org. Registration is free, and admission for those not competing is $3 or $2 with a canned good. All are welcome to enter.

OPINION

Weekend warriors

If you're working Friday, leave early. If you're not, then don't make any plans apart from getting a hold of an American flag and a yellow ribbon. Or better yet, construct a "welcome back" poster because Hingham's 1058th is coming home after 14 months in Iraq.

Plans are for the 140-member Transportation Company that will travel from Ft. Drum, N.Y. to arrive with a police escort around 5p.m. at the Hingham Armory on Central Street, which will be closed to through traffic.

Although a big celebration with speeches and music is planned for mid-June at Lantana in Randolph, there is nothing like those first moments back home when emotions run high. It's a precious time when the soldiers will be reunited with their families, who have weathered constant fear about their safety.

Little Jonathan Hillman, 18 months, of Marshfield doesn't know his Dad, but his mother has told him over and over that his "daddy is coming home" so he knows Friday will be a special time. We can only imagine the overwhelming love and pride that will fill the heart of Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Hillman when he holds Jonathan for the first time in more than a year and gives him a great big hug.

A year ago February, the members of the 1058th put their regular lives on hold to answer our country's call.

Marion White has courageously led the 1058th support group through months of ups and downs. Armed with her cell phone, she takes calls at all times of the day and night to provide words of comfort or a shoulder to cry on. She'll be the woman literally "Velcro-ed" to the front of the bus that will hold her 29-year-old daughter Spc. Kathleen White on Friday.

Janelle Stockbridge is going to be reunited her husband Spc. Robert Stockbridge. They were practically newlyweds when he left. "I'll probably stand there frozen," she says. "But he plans on smothering me with hugs and kisses and I'll gladly take those by the dozen!"

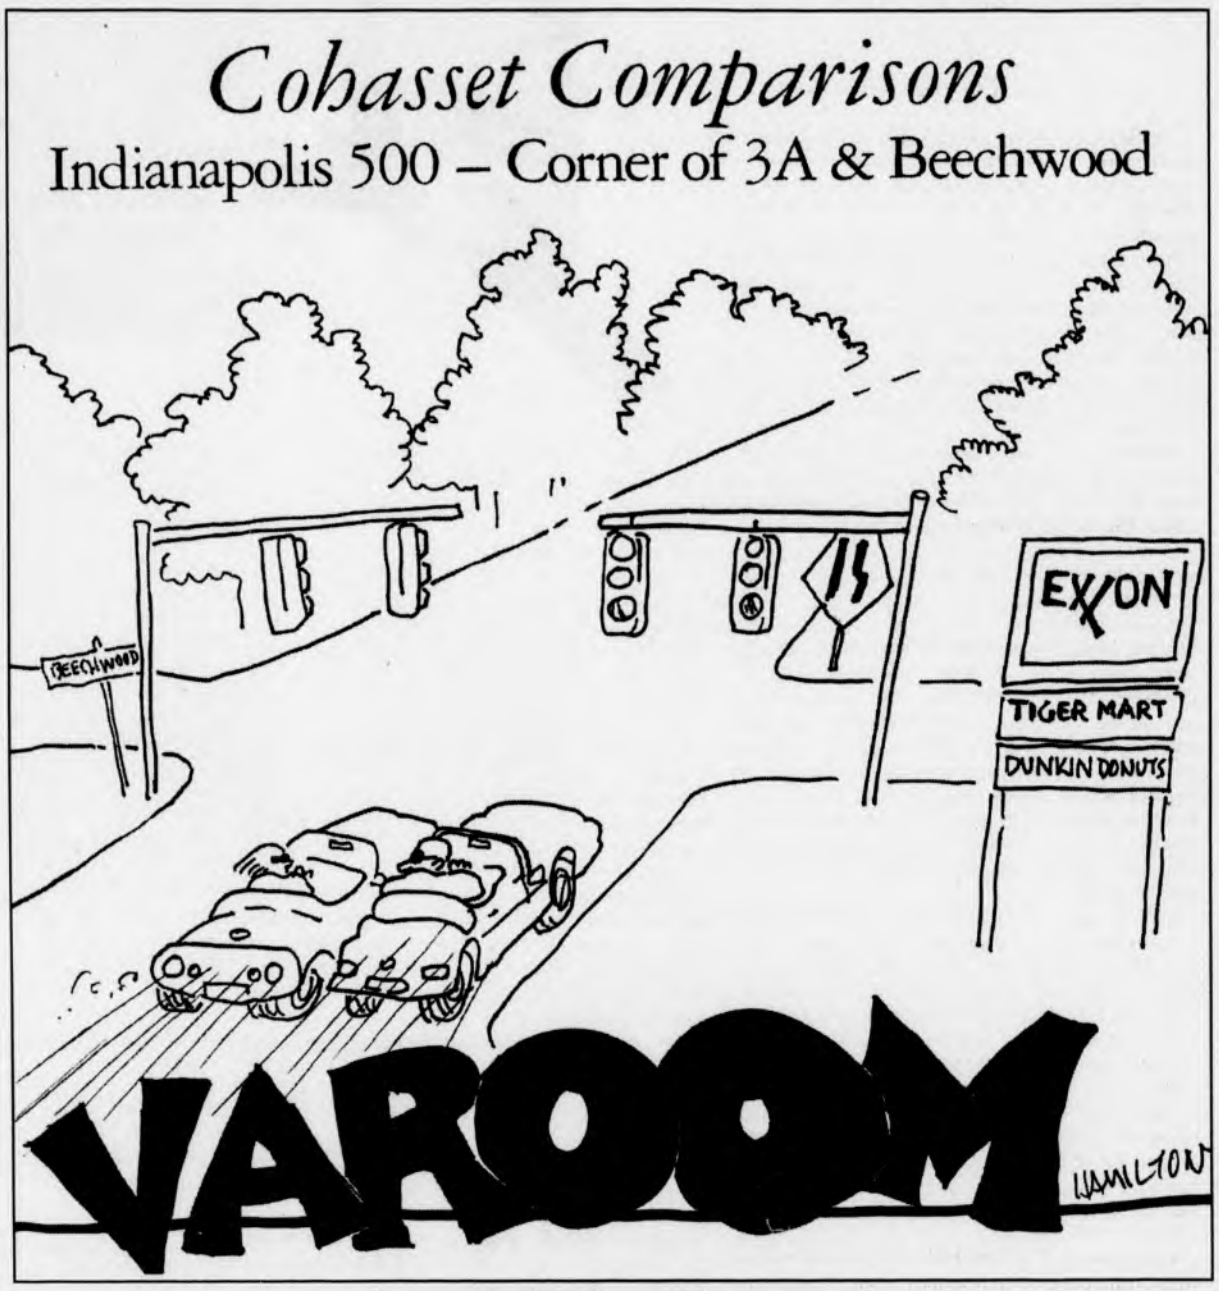
The 1058th – like so many of the troops in Iraq – are Weekend Warriors who signed up for the National Guard or Reserves and did their "military thing" on weekends and for two weeks every summer. The rest of the time they are just like you and me, and are from all walks of life.

But a year ago February, the members of the 1058th put their regular lives on hold to answer our country's call. The 1058th is a support unit and in a conventional war probably would not have been on the front lines.

As Ms. White says, "We are so proud of them and everyone should be proud of the job they've done."

She explained when the 1058th went to Iraq, there were no barracks, no showers, no phones and no basic comforts. The 1058th helped lay the groundwork, so the soldiers heading to Iraq today will have an easier time when it comes to living arrangements.

The job of the 1058th also changed drastically. "They went over as truck drivers for supplies and ended up driving gun trucks supporting convoys," Ms. White says.



"Massachusetts should be so proud of them," she says. "These are weekend warriors who stepped up to the plate. They are an inspiration to all and did it with honor."

The State Senate adjourned Tuesday in honor of the 1058th's return so the momentous occasion would forever be memorialized in the official legislative record.

We hope that hundreds or perhaps thousands of local residents will line Route 228 and Central Street to greet the 1058th, which may arrive early so be out there before 5 p.m.!

Support our troops! Let's give the 1058th a welcome home to remember.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Response to Harvey's letter

TO THE EDITOR:

Surely we all can agree wholeheartedly with Lou Harvey that our new Board of Selectmen and other elected officials should strive to control costs, make efficient use of revenue to provide excellent schools and protect the town's character, and conduct the public's business fairly and with respect for the opinions of our citizens.

These laudable goals are consistent with the efforts of generations of our fellow citizens who have devoted much time, thought and talent to public service. Cohasset has been unusually fortunate in having always had a pool of competent and responsible people who have often demonstrated their capacity for innovative thinking. They have served us well, even if some of us aren't getting all we want while complaining about the cost of what we do get. We need continuation of this devoted and intelligent service, and should not denigrate their efforts by assuming that their goals and practices were any less honorable, effective or imaginative than those that may come after.

Sure, every community has its share of those poorly endowed with competence, honesty and fairness, but we seldom elect or re-elect them to local offices where their behavior is so easily scrutinized. Most of us disagree occasionally with this or that position taken by our various elected or appointed officials, but overall their thinking is dumb no more often than for the rest of us, and as good as we can expect from their well-meaning successors. So, although there is always room for re-analysis and improvement in our town management, it is fallacious, and counterproductive, to assume that we have been so badly served in the past that "new" thinking and drastic personnel changes are the magic answer to our problems.

No, it is better to build carefully on the legacy of experience and honorable effort that has been Cohasset's good fortune. Rather than precluding innovative thinking, recognition of the past helps mold the innovation toward effectiveness. I commend Mr. Harvey for his review of goals, many of which are an eloquent re-statement of the best thinking over the years by those we had chosen to act for us.

Some answers and a big question

TO THE EDITOR:

After listening to the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday, April 13, no solid ideas of funding for the security at the beach.

Post signs in town-owned lot. All cars will be towed at owner's expense plus a $100 fine.

Without proper beach sticker.

After 10 p.m. when beach is closed

Secure and lock gate.

Money raised by fines to pay for two special police officers working split shifts for a period of 90 days, while beach is open.

Temporary stickers to be color coded and cost $20 for one-day use only.

Stickers should be numbered and colors rotated so they can not be duped.

After the Selectmen's meeting was over on Tuesday, April 13, I was watching the school committee meeting.

Barbara Buckley, 272 N. Main St., had come up with a idea of raising funds to hire teachers.

If this idea succeeds, who pays the tab after the first year? Will it be we, the taxpayers? Will there be more monies for the schools and less money for the town side, higher taxes — more overrides?

George E. Broderick

Appreciates support

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you to the voters of Cohasset who supported my candidacy for the Planning Board. I am deeply grateful for the outpouring of support and good wishes that I received throughout the campaign and since the election. I look forward to being a strong advocate for the preservation of the town's character during what I hope will be a long tenure on the Planning Board.

Special thanks go out to the 75 or so property owners who displayed campaign signs in their front yards as well as the people who took the time to offer their opinions and advice. The campaign offered me a wonderful opportunity to meet new friends, share ideas, and learn more about your concerns. These meetings confirmed my feelings that we live in wonderful town that is worthy of preserving and one that is occupied by concerned, reasonable and polite citizens.

LIBRARY CORNER

Author event

Reserve the date! The Paul Pratt Memorial Library and Buttonwood Books & Toys will host Daggers & Desserts, an evening of mystery and delicious desserts, on Thursday May 6, at 7 p.m. at the library.

Featured authors will be Linda Barnes "Deep Pockets: A Carlotta Carlyle Mystery", David Daniel, "Goofy Foot: An Alex Rasmussen Mystery" and Katherine Hall Page, discussing "The Body in the Attic: A Faith Fairchild Mystery".

All three authors feature local areas as the setting for their novels. "Deep Pockets" takes place at Harvard, "Goofy Foot" is situated in Standish, a fictional town between Boston and Plymouth and "The Body in the Attic" is located in Cambridge. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. For more information please call 781 383-1348.

Spring into wellness

"Renew Yourself With Natural Wellness Technologies," is the theme of a presentation to be held at the library On Tuesday, May 18, at 7 p.m. and on Thursday May 20, at 1 p.m. If you have low energy, trouble sleeping, tired achy feet or legs, sore joints, or just want to have renewed energy and feel great, then this educational workshop is for you. Cohasset Nutritionist and Wellness consultant, Patricia Messing-Hague, will discuss innovative and unique ways to help the body heal itself and stay well, vigorous and energetic. Special guest speaker Carole Siegal of Cohasset will tell the story of her health renewal. This program is free and open to everyone. If you have questions, call Patricia Messing-Hague at 781 383-2410.

Artist exhibit

Stephanie Roberts' exhibit "Patterns and Pinhole" will be on display at the library through April 30.

"Best list" for fiction

The Passenger pigeon: once a living wind

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

"The tantivy of wild pigeons, an ancient race of birds, gives a voice to the air."

— Henry David Thoreau

Thanks to the messy eating habits of the sparrows, starlings and squirrels, the ground beneath my feeders is strewn with all sorts of seed, an invitation to the Mourning doves to begin their shift. I watch these peaceful birds — sometimes called turtle doves — bobbing their delicate, round heads as they poke around the banquet table. Their colors are soft browns and grays with a bluish cast, not unlike the colors of the snowless winter landscape, yet the birds seem to glow, giving life to their otherwise drab surroundings. If the weather allowed my windows to be flung open, I'd hear their low, mournful coos and their whistling wings as they take flight.

But this is not a story about Mourning doves. It is, rather, a story about the dove's cousin, the Wild pigeon, better known as the Passenger pigeon, a bird now extinct but once so abundant that during migration single flocks took days to pass overhead. At one time the air was alive with the birds who had few natural predators. Until, that is, the human predator arrived.

It is a sad paradox that the presence of humans benefited the Mourning dove, but doomed its slender, elegant cousin. Land clearings, while providing the ground-feeding Mourning dove with fields and gardens, destroyed the great, unbroken swaths of primary forest — the chestnut, oak and beech trees — that the arboreal Passenger pigeon depended on for mast, roosting and nesting. Man's insatiable need to put exotic foods on the table, to shoot birds for sport, provide feathers for bedding and the millinery trade, and specimens for avian collections, further hastened the pigeon's decline.

But how could so abundant a bird have been hunted to extinction? Experts have pondered whether biological "defects,' including flimsy nests, nesting densities that resulted in a high natural mortality, and the pigeon's single egg clutches contributed to its demise. But, didn't those same "defects," enable the Passenger pigeon to become, in its day, the most abundant species on Earth? Today, with a better understanding of the biology of colonial birds, scientists recognize that certain species require an optimum density to ensure that the birth rate exceeds the death rate. A seemingly abundant population may, in fact, be insufficient to sustain the species. In the Passenger pigeon's case, man did not have to kill every last bird.

A gregarious and sociable bird, the Passenger pigeon, whose name comes to us from the French, Pijon de passage, was beautifully colored with a bluish back, pink breast and patches of pink iridescence on the sides of its throat. Thoreau noted in his journal that, "The reflections from their necks were very beautiful. They made me think of shells cast up on a beach." With its small head and neck, long tail and long wedge-shaped wings powered by large breast muscles, the pigeon could fly far and fast, reaching speeds of 60 miles per hour.

And did it fly, traveling for miles in enormous nomadic flocks (the pigeon's scientific name, Ectopistes migratorius means wandering wanderer) in search of food. Witnesses to the migrations — back and forth from spring nesting areas in the Great Lakes region and Canada to wintering sites from Arkansas to Florida — wrote of graceful aerial maneuvers that mimicked the windings of a great river. Newspapers reported that the multitudes of birds looked like thunderheads. They darkened the sky, eclipsed the sun. The wind generated by the "roaring" wings was said to chill the area. At nesting sites, majestic trees were felled under the weight of a hundred nests. John James Audubon, witness to a flock in 1813, noted that it measured some four miles wide and 300 miles long. It took three days to pass.

The same behavior that enabled the Passenger pigeon to defend itself in the wild against its few natural predators and increase the chances of finding food, proved to be its undoing once professional market hunters entered the picture. The vast flocks that flew low and congregated in forests became easy targets.

Native Americans had always hunted the Passenger pigeon for food, smoking and drying the tender squabs and using their oil for a squab butter. Despite their dependency on the bird, there was no Native American market for Passenger pigeon; what was taken was taken only for subsistence. It was a modest killing compared to the wholesale slaughter by European settlers who, when they arrived with their firearms, found the Passenger pigeon population numbering between three and five billion.

From the start, Passenger pigeons were targets, not only for food, but because they were considered pests and omens. Pigeons fed on farmers' freshly planted fields and vacuumed the forests clean of mast, leaving nothing for farmers' hogs. Among the superstitious Europeans, the birds were thought to be harbingers of disasters — massacres, crop failures and "sickly" seasons.

As technology improved and the market began demanding succulent squabs for the fancy urban table, professional hunters and trappers descended on the pigeons with a vengeance. A single blast from a shotgun could kill up to 50 of the tightly congregated birds. Long sticks were used to knock the birds from trees, even from the air as they migrated overhead. Dead grass (killed by layers of pigeon dung) under trees was set afire. The smoke suffocated the birds in their nests. Hunters and trappers baited wide areas with alcohol-soaked grain that made the pigeons woozy with intoxication. They were then easily collected. Live pigeons, tethered to a perch called a stool, were also used to lure fellow birds to the bait. Betrayed by the "stool pigeons," the victims were netted, up to 30 dozen at a time. As an example of the hunter's avarice, during the legendary, 200 square mile nesting of Passenger pigeons in 1878 at Petoskey, Michigan, more than 10 million birds were killed. Sadly, they were not numbers out of the ordinary.

Irreversible toll

Further technological advancements helped seal the Passenger pigeon's fate. The telegraph enabled hunters to communicate the precise whereabouts of flocks. The expanding railroad network not only transported hunters closer and closer to pristine primary forests, but carried their bounties to distant cities where Passenger pigeon squab became a delicacy. By 1850, with vast tracts of primary forests felled, colonial nestings disrupted, and an appetite for young Passenger pigeon seemingly insatiable, the slaughter had taken an irreversible toll on the "inexhaustible" supply of birds.

The last large nesting of Passenger pigeons in Massachusetts took place in 1851 and over the next several decades, last nestings were recorded all over the Eastern part of the country. Far from raising an alarm, however, the decrease in Passenger pigeon flocks only strengthened the resolve of hunters.

One of the last recorded captures of a Passenger pigeon was in 1900, and though several small captive flocks of pigeons survived, efforts to breed the birds were unsuccessful. By 1912, rewards were being offered for evidence of a live Wild pigeon.

In September of 1914, the last Passenger pigeon, a 29-year-old named Martha, died in her cage at the Cincinnati Zoological Garden. Over the years, many "sightings" of Passenger pigeons have been reported, all of which have turned out to be the pigeon's gentle cousin, the Mourning dove. Extinction, as they say, is a one-way street. There are no second chances in nature. The story of the Passenger pigeon is a stunning, heartbreaking example of mindless destruction. Sadly, it is but one chapter in the never-ending book of human greed.

In his classic 1949 book, "A Sand County Almanac," Aldo Leopold included a moving tribute to the Passenger pigeon:

"Men still live who, in their youth, remember pigeons. Trees still live who, in their youth, were shaken by a living wind. But a decade hence only the oldest oaks will remember, and at long last only the hills will know.

"There will always be pigeons in books and in museums, but these are effigies and images, dead to all hardships and to all delights. Book-pigeons cannot dive out of a cloud to make the deer run for cover, or clap their wings in thunderous applause of mast-laden woods. Book-pigeons cannot breakfast on new-mown wheat in Minnesota, and dine on blueberries in Canada. They know no urge of seasons; they feel no kiss of sun, no lash of wind and weather. They live forever by not living at all.

First Ladies and the critics

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The nabobs of negativity turned their spotlight on Theresa Heinz Kerry this week and the gazillionaire wife of Senator John the Candidate doesn't seem to like it.

She refuses to toss her 1040 income tax form into the ring so that the folks who just have to know and thumb through it might find, not where her money comes from, but where it goes, maybe to some left wing cause like her husband's campaign.

All I can say is that she'd better get used to it. It'll be worse if her husband is elected president and Theresa has to live in the constant glare of the White House. Not many First Ladies escaped it, not even the motherly Bess Truman.

One youth-conscious critic even had the audacity to criticize her gray hair. "Gentlemen prefer blondes," he said. "Real gentlemen prefer gray," snapped her husband, Harry, who was never at a loss for words when it came time to defend his family.

It'll be worse if her husband is elected president and Theresa has to live in the constant glare of the White House.

Dolley Madison, otherwise one of the more popular First Ladies, drew criticism for serving state dinners in heaping platters rather than serving them in courses as was done in royal banquets in Europe. Makes the country look plebian, they said. Dolley didn't mind.

Julia Grant, who was never pictured facing the camera because her eyes crossed, was a rather plain-looking women but Godey's Lady's Book went out of bounds when it confided in its readers that "Mrs. Grant ain't a bit handsome. She ain't half as good-lookin' as the pictures we see of her."

Probably to most maligned of all the presidential wives was Eleanor Roosevelt, who lived a life of her own while husband Franklin D. was in the Oval Office and didn't care who knew it.

Hearst columnist Westbrook Pegler, the Rush Limbaugh-in-print of his day, never failed to refer to her as La Boca Grande (The Big Mouth) and the New Yorker magazine once printed a cartoon of two workmen in a mine deep underground in New Zealand looking up in astonishment and saying, "It's Mrs. Roosevelt!"

Rachel Jackson, old Andy's wife, lived through the campaign of 1828 but died a couple of months before her husband was inaugurated and Old Hickory swore it was the critics who killed her.

"In the presence of this dear saint," he said at her funeral, "I can and do forgive all my enemies. But those vile wretches who slandered her must look to God for mercy."

Seems the Jacksons inadvertently had "married" and lived together before Rachel's divorce from her first husband was final and some of Jackson's foes in the 1828 campaign never let them forget it.

Besides, in the view of effete easterners, the lady from Tennessee was really no lady at all since she used rough frontier language and — Heavens to Betsy! — she was known to smoke a pipe at times.

Katie Smith, the wife of Al Smith, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for president in 1928, never got to the White House, but she was fair game during the campaign where she was called "dowdy, vulgar and unfit to be first lady."

Betty Boyd Caroli's book "America's First Ladies," my source for much of this column, recalled:

"One Texan, pointing out that Katie would be meeting foreign dignitaries if she got to the White House, asked, 'Can you imagine? One of them might say "That's a nice hat," and she'd say, 'You said a mouthful.'"

House sparrows — their rise and fall

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Officially known as the House Sparrow, many people know it as the English Sparrow. In spite of its name, it is neither a true sparrow nor did it originate in England. It looks similar to native North American sparrows, but actually belongs to the Weaver Finch family, better known as Old World Sparrows. It is believed to have originated in the Mediterranean and expanded its range as civilization spread. It is native to Asia, northern Africa and most of Europe. Gradually it was introduced to the United States, Canada, South America, southern Africa, New Zealand, Australia, and is found on all continents except Antarctica.

In 1851 eight pairs were imported from England to the United States by Nicholas Pike, one of the directors of the Brooklyn Museum in Brooklyn, New York. None of these birds survived. The next year, he went to England and brought back more birds to release in Greenwood Cemetery with the hope that the birds would control the green inchworm. These imports survived and multiplied. During the next few years immigrants from Europe, homesick for their familiar "cheeky cockney sparrow" introduced more all around New England. The expansion was amazingly rapid. Within 25 years, the House Sparrow had spread all the way to the west coast.

This popular bird quickly became a pest. Unfortunately it not only ate noxious insects such as the inchworm, but also many beneficial insects. Not only did it eat seeds found in horse manure left by an increasing number of horses on city streets, but also fruit and ripe grain crops on farms. These sparrows like to be near habitation. Their nests are messy collections of grass, straw, trash, feathers, etc. and can become a fire hazard when a smoldering cigarette butt is used as nesting material near a building. House Sparrows aggressively displace many native birds such as Cliff Swallows, Purple Martins, and Eastern Bluebirds, all of which are cavity nesters. They also are very prolific, sometimes raising as many as three broods in a single season. Between 1887 and 1901 the state of Michigan's bounty law offered one cent apiece for House Sparrows presented in groups of 25 or more birds. When horse transportation gave way to automobiles, House Sparrow populations declined somewhat, but they remained one of the most numerous birds in the United States.

FROM BIRDS OF MASSACHUSETTS AND OTHER NEW ENGLAND STATES BY EDWARD HOWE FORBUSH

According to Edward Howe Forbush, ornithologist for the state of Massachusetts from 1908 to 1920, the sparrow mentioned in the Bible is the House Sparrow. Alexander Pope in his "Essay on Man" says, "Who sees with equal eye, as God of all, A hero perish or a sparrow fall...". A line from "Hamlet," Act V, Scene 1 is "There's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow." A brief search on Amazon.com yielded more than two dozen books using some variation of "fall of sparrows" in the title.

Today the fall of the House Sparrow is not just a literary reference, but a real concern, particularly in Britain where it was placed on the endangered species list in 2002. Between 1994 and 2002, the number of House Sparrows in London dropped 71percent. Populations were down 13percent overall in England. For some reason they were up 29percent in Scotland and 63percent in Wales. They have disappeared from many other European cities such as Amsterdam and Hamburg, but not Berlin. They are even declining in the United States, although the estimate for continental United States is still around 150 million.

Why this sudden and rather large decline? No mass killing. Not pesticides. Not even loss of habitat in the usual sense. Not only House Sparrows are declining in Britain, but other native countryside species as well. According to Chris Leahy, the Gerard A. Bertrand Chair of Natural History and Field Ornithology at Massachusetts Audubon, one likely cause might be a "habitat sterilization process". He says, "In order to maximize yield, farmers have eliminated hedgerows, wet meadows, and weed patches, and minimized grain spillage — all critical sources of food, shelter, and reproductive space for farmland birds." This does not explain the huge loss in urban settings, nor why there is expansion in some places at the same time declines are occurring in others.

Obviously there is much we do not understand. The British Trust for Ornithology (BTO) has long used amateur volunteers to collect data, in much the same way the Cornell Lab of Ornithology does in its citizen science program. The BTO has organized the Common Birds Census and the Garden Bird Feeding Survey to collect data. One lesson from all of this is that we should study not just rare and "interesting" birds, but also common and "nuisance" birds. If the BTO had been studying House Sparrows back in the 60s and 70s when everyone just considered them pests, we might have recognized the problem sooner and have a better understanding of what the problem is. Massachusetts Audubon is taking this warning to heart by asking people for their help in monitoring Baltimore Orioles, still a common species. For more information, please see <www.massaudubon.org/oriole>

Meanwhile next time you see House Sparrows picking up crumbs outside storefronts, or helping themselves to tasty tidbits left on the ground at fast food chains, take a closer look at this little brown bird. The males have a gray crown, black bib, white cheeks, and chestnut nape. The females are mostly plain brown with a buff eyestripe. Their song is a constantly repeating "cheep, cheep". Some have suggested, not totally seriously, that we should send some of our birds over to England. Before that happens, we need to figure why they are disappearing on both sides of the Atlantic.

Joanne Norton is an avid birder, counts birds for Project FeederWatch, bands birds at Manomet Center for Conservation Sciences, and until recently has been the Master Bander for the New England Wildlife Center.

No game, set or match yet in state budget back 'n forth

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

With release of the House budget, the virtues and defects of competing Democratic and Republican approaches to financing the coming year now lie on the table open for debate — and that debate began immediately.

Synopsis: The Republicans advance their budget, presented by the governor in January, as disciplined and centered around real reform of problems in the organization and operation of state government. The Democrats counter that the governor's budget is based on illusory savings and underfunding, and that their budget is more honest and somewhat more generous.

Beginning this year's match of back-and-forth, House budget chief Rep. John Rogers served, and Administration and Finance Secretary Eric Kriss returned just as hard as he could. Rogers told reporters: "Our recommendation upholds the multi-year strategy inaugurated three years ago, at the start of the fiscal crisis, to restore fiscal stability to the state budget." But Kriss said the document is a "cynical, irresponsible, and intellectually dishonest" budget that short circuits true reform, panders to special interests and drains state reserves. As always, the underpinning of this to-and-fro is that the Democrat-controlled Legislature has the votes, and the governor/executive departments, i.e. the Republicans, don't. Policy issues under the Golden Dome are settled by majority vote – certainly by two-thirds votes, in the case of budget vetoes, with Democratic leaders historically confident they can round up that supermajority pretty much any time they want. History confirms their confidence is justified.

But Romney and the Republicans are out to change history. With one of the strongest recruitment and support efforts the Statehouse crowd has seen in years, the governor and Dominick Ianno, executive director of the state GOP, are hoping to shift a dynamic that has been around so long it sometimes feels like a law of nature, not a changeable arrangement of political power.

Though this budget comes in the midst of quite a fraught political year – Romney's on the offensive, the state is running a favorite son against a sitting president, the Democratic convention's coming to Boston and gay marriage is generating a steady current of national notice – the document and its choices are only going to be blips on the consciousness of the average Massachusetts voter.

But every blip counts. Both sides know every passing mention of a reform resisted by Democrats or a budget item cut by Republicans can make an impact on voter behavior when Nov. 2 comes. That's partly why the governor was eager to support the more fiscally challenging interpretation of a recent court ruling stating that a mid-year increase in the capital gains tax was unconstitutional.

Romney said his administration would support making a reduction in the tax retroactive to January 2002, instead of January 2003. That would take as much as $275 million away from the revenue side of this year's budget. But it would also position Romney as the taxpayers' friend, to the extent the taxpayers notice what's being said on Beacon Hill. The battle of the blips is being waged at full tilt.

Some of the most important bullet points from the House budget proposal:

- The House plan totals $22.5 billion — $24.65 billion with off-budget items factored in, the Mass. Taxpayer Foundation said. On that basis, the governor's budget totals $24.51 billion, MTF said.
- The budget closes a $1.5 billion spending gap with cuts and $652 million in "one-time revenues," Roger said. Of the $652 million, $340 comes from the "rainy day" fund; $270 million is from a special federal relief fund; $25 million from sale of state land; and $17 million from a fund ostensibly dedicated to renewable energy.
- Rogers said about 350 state workers would be let go under the budget. Most areas of the government can expect cuts, largely because health costs are outpacing tax revenue increases.
- State colleges and universities take a 2 percent cut, community colleges a 1 percent reduction.
- Among the few areas enjoying increases: local aid for special education and school transportation; the Prescription Advantage program; MCAS tutoring; and drug treatment. General local aid is level-funded.
- K-12 education funding is increased by 2.2 percent, to $3.19 billion. Prescription Advantage enjoys a $14 million increase in the House budget, enough to enroll 10,000 more seniors. The governor had level funded the program at $96 million.
- About $20 million in funding is provided for raising the pay of outside-vendor human services workers, who've gone without a hike for two years.
- The House goes along with many of Romney's closures of business-tax loopholes, which some in the corporate world consider tax hikes.
- Several reforms trumpeted by the Romney team in its budget were not included: merging the Turnpike Authority and the Mass. Highway Department; dissolving the Boston Municipal Court and turning its functions over to other district courts; reforming the state's bidding and construction laws to speed up the process and save money.
- The House does establish a "Mass. Transportation Coordination Council" to look for efficiencies and process improvements among transit bureaucracies.

A story has the potential to just about knock the budget completely out of the news cycle: did anyone hide the truth in reviewing House action on redistricting?

- US attorney said looking at whether leaders were truthful — The Boston Globe reported a subpoena was sent March 10 to Rep. Thomas Petrolati, D-Ludlow, head of a committee in charge of redrawing district maps for all 160 House seats. The subpoena from US Attorney Michael Sullivan's office asks for documents relative to the redistricting. In a trial last year, House Speaker Thomas Finneran said he had little involvement in drawing up the map. Investigators may well be pursuing a claim made by the three-judge panel that struck down the House map and ordered a new one redrawn for reasons of racial fairness. In issuing their ruling, the judges reviewed Finneran's testimony of a lack of knowledge or involvement in the creation of the districts, and said: "the circumstantial evidence strongly suggests the opposite conclusion." Common Cause of Massachusetts called for a perjury investigation in the case March 9, but there is no confirmation that the subpoena and that request are at all related. Meanwhile, in the redistricting case itself, parties were due in court Friday as plaintiffs continue to argue that House leaders have not come up with a map that maximizes minority voting power and the opportunities for minority candidates to tap into their base of support.
- Romney seeks legislation for special gay marriage counsel — In what one observer described as a "Hail Mary pass for the governor," Romney said he's filing legislation allowing him to appoint a special counsel to fight the May 17 effective date for the issuance of marriage licenses to gay couples in Massachusetts. Even were the House to approve the extraordinary measure, the Senate took several majority votes in favor of gay marriage during the Constitution Convention this winter and spring, and would be unlikely to approve Romney's request for counsel. Attorney General Thomas Reilly, who refused to pursue a stay of the issuance of the licenses last month, signaled his opposition to the new Romney gambit as a usurpation of his authority.
- Democrats back $1 billion school plan supported by sales tax — The plan floated by Senate Ways and Means Chair Therese Murray, D-Plymouth, and state Treasurer Timothy Cahill would designate a penny of the state's 5-cent sales tax to an ongoing bugaboo: school building assistance. The leaders said their plan would, over 3-1/2 years, clear a list of 420 school construction projects, with a collective construction value of $4 billion. The governor has also proposed wiping out the waiting list, but largely through refinancing existing debt. Kriss lambasted the SBAB plan as inferior and far less specific than the administration's version.
- Charter proponents say experiment should grow, not cease — Opponents of the semi-autonomous, experimental institutions have generated much of the press lately on the charter school front. But proponents counterpunched. Opponents have been saying no more charter schools should be allowed to open while the state struggles to fund and improve traditional school systems statewide. But about 200 proponents of charter schools, and lawmakers who support such schools, crowded a hearing room to oppose such moratoria and urge a continuance of the momentum behind the charter movement.

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls from the week of April 12-16. There were no roll calls in the Senate last week.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS FOR SENIORS (H 4659)

House 148-2, approved resolutions stating the intent of the Legislature to provide $110 million in the fiscal 2005 budget for the Prescription Advantage program. This prescription drug insurance plan is available to seniors over age 65 and low-income individuals with disabilities who work less than 40 hours per week. Members are required to pay premiums, deductibles and co-payments on a sliding scale based on their gross annual household income. The plan also includes an annual out-of-pocket spending limit. Supporters said this pledge would increase last year's $96 million funding by $14 million and ensure that more seniors can enroll in this program. They noted the program currently helps 90,000 seniors who otherwise would go without the drugs or be forced to cut back on other household expenses. Opponents said the House should delay action on the resolutions until the House version of the fiscal 2005 budget is released. They argued that members should have the opportunity to review the entire budget prior to making promises about funding for specific programs. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions stating the intent to provide $110 million. A "Nay" vote is against the resolutions). Y

RULES FOR HOUSE BUDGET DEBATE (H 4646)

House 123-25, approved a set of rules to be followed when the House considers the fiscal 2005 state budget beginning April 26. A key provision requires that any member who proposes an increase in spending in excess of $100,000 also offer a proposal decreasing spending by an equal or greater amount. Other provisions include requiring any tax hikes or tax cuts to be considered first followed by consideration of all other amendments; prohibiting earmarking of revenues from tax hikes for specific programs; barring members from proposing amendments dealing with casino gambling, slot machines, video gaming and certain categories of local aid. Supporters said these new rules would impose fiscal responsibility in light of the state's huge deficit, prevent members from offering new spending without making corresponding cuts and establish how much revenue the state will receive prior to debate on where to spend the money. They noted that the prohibition on offering local aid amendments is included because the House would shortly resolve the local aid question by adopting resolutions detailing the amount of local aid the Legislature intends to provide. Opponents said the new rules give more power to Speaker Finneran and his Ways and Means Committee by allowing them to propose a budget without the same "increase/decrease" restriction placed on members who offer amendments. They said the new rules are restrictive and anti-democratic and would further decrease the input and power of individual members. (A "Yea" vote is for the new rules. A "Nay" vote is against the new rules). Y

ALLOW DEBATE ON CASINO GAMBLING (H 4646)

House 78-72, favored but failed to gain the two-thirds margin necessary to approve an amendment striking a budget rules section prohibiting members from offering budget amendments dealing with casino gambling, slot machines and video gaming. Some amendment supporters said they support legalizing casino gambling and argued that it would produce a valuable revenue stream that would be helpful in solving the state's budget problems. Others said they do not support casino gambling but argued that it is unfair to prohibit members from offering amendments to legalize it. Amendment opponents said these issues have been debated and defeated in the past. They argued that it is counterproductive to open up the important and lengthy budget debate to reconsider these proposals. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing members to offer budget amendments dealing with casino gambling, slot machines and video gaming. A "Nay" vote is against allowing it). Y

ALLOW DEBATE ON LOCAL AID (H 4646)

House 22-125, rejected an amendment striking a budget rules section prohibiting members from offering budget amendments dealing with local aid in three specific categories— Chapter 70 Education Aid, Additional Assistance and Lottery Distribution. Amendment supporters said it is undemocratic and restrictive to prohibit members from offering increases or decreases in local aid. They acknowledged that the House would soon approve resolutions stating the Legislature's intent to increase local aid including the specific amounts intended for each community but argued that members should still have the power to offer additional amendments when the budget debate begins. Amendment opponents said that once the House approves the resolutions to increase local aid, it should not deviate from those promised amounts. They argued that it is important for cities and towns to know now how much local aid they will receive. They noted that if local aid amendments to the budget are allowed and approved, communities would not know how much local aid they would receive until several weeks from now when the House and Senate agree on a final version of the budget. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing members to offer budget amendments dealing with local aid. A "Nay" vote is against allowing it). N

LOCAL AID RESOLUTIONS (H 4658)

House 147-0, approved resolutions stating the intent of the Legislature regarding how much local aid it would provide in the fiscal 2005 state budget and how it would be distributed. The resolutions include increases of $78 million in Chapter 70 education aid, $80 million in special education reimbursement and $11.7 million in regional school transportation funding. They also level fund Lottery Assistance and Additional Local Assistance at last year's funding levels. Supporters said this states the Legislature's intent that cities and towns should not experience drastic local aids cuts like the ones they endured last year. They noted that approving the resolutions now would inform communities how much local aid they can expect so that they can plan their municipal budgets without waiting for the long state budget process to end. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions). Y

Task force takes on village streetscape designs

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of the planning board, board of selectmen, and concerned residents are considering forming a committee to change the direction the Village Streetscape project is heading in.

At the request of Selectman Ralph Dormitzer — who feels the opinion of both town boards and residents have not been adequately represented in the plans drawn by the Waterfield Design Group — a task force has been formed, and will be formally appointed at the selectmen's next meeting Tuesday, April 27. Members of the task force will include Dormitzer, developer David Calhoun, architect Jim Sandell, developer Wayne Sawchuk, planning board member Bob Sturdy, and attorney Tom Hamilton whose office is located in the Village.

"I know it's the 11th hour, but it's kind of in keeping with the way things get done in Cohasset," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore.

One of the biggest concerns expressed by those in attendance at a meeting last week was the lack of bids which have come in on the project. Sawchuk said when only three bids are taken out on a million-dollar project and one of those three pulls out, it makes him wonder what the problem is with the plans. "I'd expect to see around 20 bids taken out and at least five or six plans submitted," he said.

"I know it's the 11th hour, but it's kind of in keeping with the way things get done in Cohasset."
— Al Moore, Planning Board

In addition, the phasing of the project, which would leave the Village torn up for roughly six months, was also seen as a major flaw in the plans. Calhoun suggested instead of hiring a clerk of the works to oversee a project that will last for six months and will have a negative impact on merchants — maybe the entire village should be shut down for approximately four days, to give the contractor the ability to work around the clock and get the job done all at once. "They could work through the night and get the job done, and not have to worry about getting dirt on someone's pastry in the morning," he said.

In addition, because John Modzelewski does a great deal of engineering consulting work for the town, members of the planning board suggested asking him if he would be available to serve as a part-time consultant for the project, instead of hiring a full time clerk of the works at a little over $46,000. It would save the town money and would allow someone with a great deal of town experience to be in charge, they say.

The feasibility of incorporating other kinds of paving materials into the streetscape has been an ongoing discussion, and the question of whether Town Meeting actually voted against having brick sidewalks was debated once more. "I don't think people voted they don't want brick, they voted they don't want to pay for brick," said Selectman Fred Koed. The task force will be looking into the feasibility of alternate paving options including brick and different kinds of pavers.

Since the town has received a state grant, there is a time limit for using the funds as well as regulations that construction must abide by. All construction must meet state guidelines if paid for with state funds, and construction must be completed by May of 2005. There was talk about taking Elm Street out of the plans and using town money to repave the street, leaving the sidewalks alone, which could free up state money to be used on South Main Street.

During construction, the water commission will be using the open streets as an opportunity to update water mains and make repairs. Moore suggested someone get in touch with the gas and electric companies as well to see if they would like to take advantage of having the streets opened up to make any repairs on their end.

Selectmen Rob Spofford said the reality of the situation is, the plans have already gone out to bid and any changes will only cost the town more money.

After the meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad said the April 30 deadline to submit bids has been delayed by 30 days and an addendum has been sent out. "I don't know if we're going to change it," he said of the current plans, but this delay will allow suggestions to be incorporated, should the selectmen choose.

The Waterfield Design Group was hired to design the new streetscape as part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, which has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for through grants and private donations. The designers will be present at the meeting with selectmen and the task force on the 27th, and plans may become more finalized at that time. The task force realizes any suggestions made will have to be authorized by the board of selectmen, but are hopeful their comments will reflect what many in town would like to see incorporated in the village project. Alzheimer's support meets on April 28

The Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. will feature Carolyn Housman, LICSW, on "Communicating with Health Care Providers" on Wednesday, April 28, at 7:30 p.m., at the Hingham Senior Center, 224 Central St., Hingham.

Housman is a specialist in elder care and care-partnering issues. She is currently associated with South Shore Mental Health and has a private practice. She was formerly director of the Alzheimer program for the Hingham Affiliated Community Visiting Nurses/Partners Home Care. She will discuss how to best speak for the patient with physicians, nursing home personnel, and day health centers as well as communicating the patient's needs to family and friends.

As the care-partner is often intermediary between patient and others, knowing what questions to ask and what information should be shared is most important. A question and answer time will conclude her program.

SENIOR SCENE

Cohasset Elder Affairs aims to enhance the quality of life for all citizens of Cohasset who are 60 years old and older, as mandated by the Older American Act. Call the CEA office at 781-383-9112 to sign up for these events and programs. Upcoming events and programs include the following:

Chair Yoga: every Thursday, 1:15 to 2 p.m.

Firming & Toning: Monday, Wednesday and Friday 7:30 a.m.

Legal Consultation Clinic once a month by appointment.

Walking Club: every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 3 p.m.

Wednesday by appointment - Pedi-Care with Jean Reardon, Nurse Practitioner. Fills up fast.

Bridge, Computer for Seniors and Lunch at the Center every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

CEA thanks volunteers

Cohasset Seniors enjoy throughout the year many social events, thanks to the generous contributions of many individuals and groups in the community. For recent events in particular, Cohasset Elder Affairs would like to thank all who helped plan, prepare, serve, entertain and clean up for Valentine's Day Tea at the Second Congregational Church in February, for the Hingham Girl Scouts Troupe who served a delicious dinner and provided entertainment to Seniors in March; and for the St. Patrick's Day dinner at St. Anthony's Parish Center, served by the Gourmet Club and chef Paul Guinee. Thanks, also, go to Mary Griffin for her outreach effort in making St. Patrick's Day dinner so special this year. We also thank the Silver Spoon for providing soup and chowder recently for one of our lunches, for the Atlantica and their Thanksgiving dinner in November and for Anna Abbruzzese and her frequent gifts of flowers and desserts at our Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday lunches.

There are many other people to acknowledge and thank: the members of the CEA Board, Anna Abbruzzzese and the Gourmet Club, the Rev. Gary Ritts and the Second Congregational Church, Father Mulvehill and St. Anthony's Church, the Unitarian Universalist Church for providing space for our FootWorks Program, the Osgood School parents and children for baking and sharing their cards and creative gifts with our Seniors, and for our many faithful volunteers who give their time to drive our vans, shop for our Seniors, serve meals on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays each week and who set tables, clean up and restore everything to their proper places; for our office receptionists who volunteer many hours receiving and fielding calls and questions about the services provided by CEA, for Attorney Susan Cox for assisting Seniors with legal advice, Roger Sullivan for assistance with income tax preparation, Austin Breslow for the computer training program for Seniors, and all the others who share their special talents.

Through the continuing support of the over 130 volunteers who tirelessly dedicate their talents and time to CEA, we as a community reap the rewards by generating in kind some $350,000 annually.

April 18-24 is National Volunteer Week, and Cohasset Elder Affairs take this opportunity to express its appreciation to each and everyone who gives of his or her time to benefit others in our community.

New comedy club to open April 23

A brand new comedy club, The Bitter Man, located at 71 S. Main Street, Cohasset, (inside the Red Lion Inn) will feature Tony V., one of Boston's top comics. Tony V. has been seen on HBO, Comedy Central, Late Night With Conan O'Brien, Seinfeld, Boston Common and Bobcat's Bigass Show as well as the films "House Sitter," "State & Main," "Celtic Pride," "One Crazy Summer" and the cinema classic "Shakes The Clown".

Joining Tony, Steve Calechman who has performed in clubs and on the radio throughout New England since 1991.

Digital City named him "Funniest Comic in Boston," and the "Boston Globe" featured him as a "Comic on the Verge of Breaking Out." And rounding out the bill, Dan Sally, who is part of Boston's underground sketch comedy scenes and host of the Dan Sally Awards.

Your host for the evening, from Steve Sweeney's Neighborhood on WZLX, Lance Norris

The show starts at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $10. Admission free with purchase of dinner. Call 781-383-1701 for reservations.

Residents invited to tiptoe through the tulips at flower show

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"There are so many extensively experienced gardeners in the club, this is a chance for them to share their experience with the community."
— Maureen Byrne, general chairman

Using literature as a source of inspiration, designers will be using flowers to express what the written word means to them, during the "Literary License" flower show, sponsored by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

Appropriately held in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, the Standard Flower Show will conform to the guidelines established by various national and federal garden clubs. It will celebrate the building's renovations, which were completed last March, giving community members who haven't had the opportunity to see its expansions an excuse to stop by, as well as an opportunity to see the creativity of registered Garden Club Federation members in Cohasset and the surrounding towns.

"There will be some wonderful arrangements and table settings," said garden club member Mary Eisenhauer. Member Sandy Durant added some of the most spectacular arrangements are the miniature arrangements, which are allowed to be no taller than five inches high.

"There are so many extensively experienced gardeners in the club, this is a chance for them to share their experience with the community," said General Chairman Maureen Byrne.

This will be the second flower show hosted by the garden club with the last taking place two years ago. Preparation has been an ongoing effort ever since. "We give flower design workshops for people in preparation and we hold mini flower shows to allow people to practice competing," said Byrne. But it's not just the club members who have been busy preparing. Tulip bulbs were planted around the library last year in anticipation of the show, with the hopes they would be in full bloom for the celebration.

For those designers participating in the floral arrangement categories, flowers can be purchased. However, that is not the case for the horticulture exhibits were contestants must grow their specimen themselves. The horticulture competition is open to all amateur growers and categories range from flowering bulbs to flowering branches, perennials, container grown plants, and plants grown from seed.

There will also be special ecological edification exhibits for young adults. Topics such as controlling destructive pests, environmentally sound lawn management, recognizing invasive plants, bird watching, and maintenance of the Lightkeeper's Gardens on Government Island will be on display.

The Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts will provide the judges for the flower show, and currently, 12 are scheduled to attend. Judges walk around and critique the pieces from 9 to 12 a.m. before the general public is invited inside. When the doors open at noon, those who attend will be able to see who won along with the judge's comments.

In addition to the flower show, the garden club will be hosting a contest for artwork to be included in their Garden Handbook. "There will be 12 chapters — one for every month," said Kathy Gray, who is heading up the book efforts. Various topics will include horticulture, gardening tips, recipes to use from the produce grown, and activities to do with children. There will also be a special section, including tips from the Community Garden Club's sister garden club in Japan.

"We hope to have a community art contest that will find us a spectacular cover," said Gray, adding artwork will be on display during the flower show in the Our World Global Discovery Museum, located in the library. The art contest is open to anyone over the age of 16 and the contest is not limited to Cohasset residents.

"We want the cover to be as colorful as possible," said Gray, and also appropriate to the context of the book. The artist whose work is chosen to grace the cover will be awarded $100. Other color pieces will also be chosen for inside pages, and black and white artwork will be interspersed with text.

While the flower show serves as a way to bring the community together, it also serves as a way for the garden club to pull together its resources. "Everyone in the club is involved in something, whether in the design, horticulture exhibits, or hostessing," said Byrne.

There is no admission fee to enter the flower show, although members admit it is an expensive show to put on. But the chance to bring a flower show to the town, which is a rare occasion, coupled with the ability to showcase a newly renovated building the town is so proud of makes it worth all the effort. "This is our club's gift to Cohasset," said Byrne.

The "Literary License" Standard Flower Show will be held Wednesday May 12 from noon to 5 p.m. The library will be closed for business all day. The exhibits will also be on display Thursday May 13 during the regular library operating hours of 9-5.

For more information on the show, please contact publicity chair Sandra Durant at (781) 383-8231. For information on entering artwork as well as the guidelines for the Garden Handbook cover contest, please call Mary Eisenhauer at (781) 383-2486. The deadline for book cover entries is Tuesday, May 11.

Cohasset's Alden Bulck (#15) protects the ball from Barnstable defender as he looks to make his move in action last week. Unfortunately, the Skippers lost this game, 11-8, to fall to 0-3 on the season.

No time to panic

Boys lax coach confident team will bounce back from 0-3 start

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys lacrosse team dropped a tough 11-8 decision to Barnstable at home last Friday to fall to 0-3 on the season.

First year Skippers coach Stu Curran insists, however, that panic has not set in for the members of his perennially powerful squad.

"We just need some good weather and a relatively dry field and we'll be fine" noted the coach. "The game with Barnstable was our first time outside all week, and I got the impression outside time hasn't been a problem for Barnstable. The rain wasn't as bad on the Cape, and I think Barnstable has more options when it comes to fields. It makes a huge difference in your preparations when you can only work out indoors."

The drenching rain in the early part of last week rendered Milliken Field unusable through Friday, and that is the only field Curran and crew have at their disposal for practice.

The disparity in outdoor prep time became evident quickly on Friday, as the host Red Raiders jumped out to a multi-goal edge in the opening quarter and took a 7-3 lead into the halftime break.

"Or defense and transition were kind of sloppy in the first half," said Curran. "We did not support (goalie) Nick Murphy well at all."

As the Skippers grew comfortable again with the feel of grass under their feet, however, their true talent began to show through. They outscored Barnstable (5-1) by a 4-1 mar-

Girls tennis coach hopes end of win streak will make team hungrier

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

With the winning streak and the Mariner Jinx now behind them, the Cohasset girls can just focus on playing good tennis.

A strong Ursuline team paid a visit to Milliken last Thursday and, in a competitive, exciting match, defeated the defending state champs, 3-2.

The match of the day came in number three singles, where Cohasset's Susan Curry and Ursuline's Megan McCarthy squared off in a 2-hour, 40-minute battle. After Curry earned a 6-2 win in the first set, things began to get interesting.

The second set was mostly back and forth, with the players trading games and finding themselves tied at four. Curry took a 5-4 lead with an excellent serve that McCarthy couldn't handle.

Serving against a double-match point, McCarthy started her comeback, including an ace to force a deuce. The Ursuline player started using some powerful baseline strokes to keep her opponent off balance. After taking that game, she broke Curry's serve and then held her own to take the set, 7-5.

The third set started in a rather unorthodox fashion, with three broken serves in a row. Curry started making some adjustments, improving her baseline coverage and forcing McCarthy to her backhand, which clearly was not as efficient as her forehand.

McCarthy took control of the match in the next two games, and found herself serving with a 4-1 lead. Curry showed a refusal to lose, breaking that serve and then taking the next game as well with some big backhand winners.

That is as close as the comeback would come, however, as McCarthy started stroking some solid winners of her own and took the set, 6-3.

The two sides split the other two matches, with Cohasset taking number one singles and number one doubles.

In the absence of Liz Stone, Holly Graham drew the number one singles assignment, and validated the coaching staff's confidence in her with a 7-6 (6-4), 6-4 victory.

CHS softball team wins third in another marathon

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Here's a little hint to help you, the fan, make it through a Cohasset High softball game.

If you think the Skippers are a lock to win a game, it might behoove you to bring a box lunch if you plan on attending the game. You're going to be there for a while.

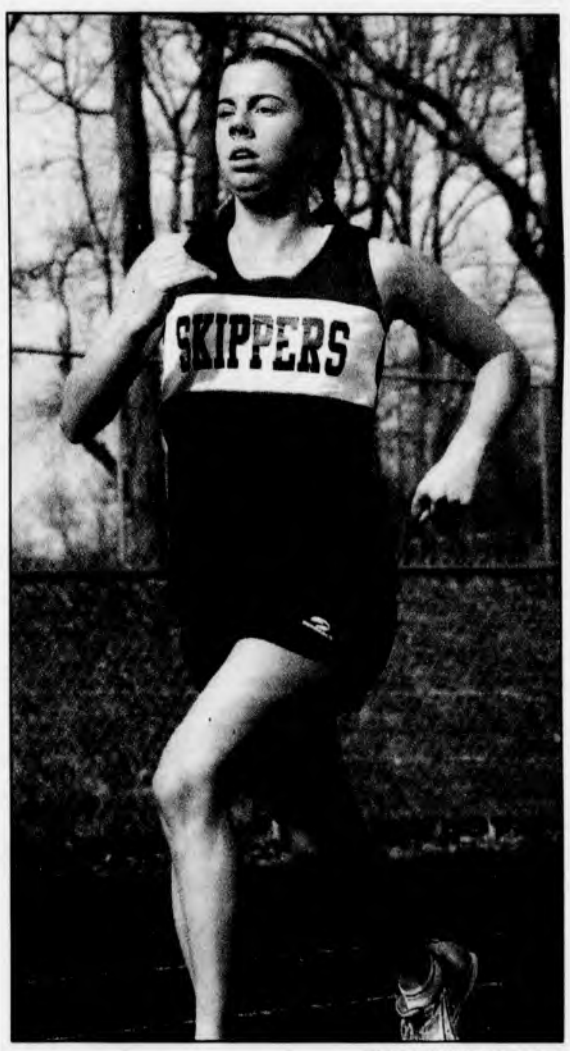
To date, Cohasset has won three games and lost two. The Skippers have amassed 60 runs over the three winning games. In fact, you might want to bring along a couple of box lunches.

Cohasset has defeated Mashpee, 13-12, Norwell, 21-12, and, just last Friday, they defeated South Shore Christian, 15-1 (the actual score was 26-1, but we'll just let it go at that).

Losing can also take a lot of time, as the 15-1 loss to Abington can attest to. The only normal game was a 7-1 Hull win over Cohasset.

Obviously, it has been quite a change for the Cohasset team that was 0-4 at the same time last year.

Despite all the runs and hitting, Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick feels the team can do better.



"We have eliminated walks and we're improving on defense," she said. "Fast pitching is still hurting us, but the kids are adjusting."

All three wins have been turned in by freshman pitcher Virginia Spofford. She won the Mashpee game in relief of Kathy James, who pitched the first five inning, leaving the game with the score tied, 5-5.

Spofford went the distance against Norwell and South Shore Christian. She struck out 10 against SSC.

The game was originally scheduled to be played on Thursday, but rain moved the game to Friday. Spofford gave up just four hits in the game.

CHS baseball team stretches win streak to three

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High baseball team extended its win streak to three and got its record over .500 for the first time since early last season with a lopsided non-league win over South Shore Christian Academy on Thursday.

Now, granted, the level of competition the Skippers get from SSCA is hardly comparable to what they'll see through the remainder of their South Shore League schedule, but it did provide the boys in blue with a chance to swing the bats and run the bases a good deal more than they normally get to, while also giving a few reserves a chance to contribute.

First year senior player Sean Connelly, for example, had his first career hit and rbi. Connelly has been a standout with the CHS football and basketball teams since his freshman year, and decided to give baseball a shot in his final available high school athletic season. He walked home a run in his first at bat and then slashed a double in his next plate appearance.

Mike Dooley finished his day with four hits, including a pair of doubles, and three rbi, and his fellow senior captain, Jeff Barrett, knocked in four runs.

Ted Straughn knocked in three runs on three hits, including a triple, and Tim Anton added to the hit parade with three singles and two rbi.

U16 girls win indoor championship

Drive, determination and desire to win. That's what's needed to avenge two regular season losses and capture the Girl's U16 Indoor Soccer Championship. Seeded third entering the playoffs Cohasset, 5wins-2losses, was scheduled to meet East Bridgewater, 5w-2l, in the semi finals. In their first meeting East Bridgewater defeated Cohasset 3-2, displaying solid skills and disciplined approach. Confident that they possessed the skills and desire to win, Cohasset took their attack to East Bridgewater early and often. Pin point passes to rushing forwards, split defenders, testing the opposing goalie. East Bridgewater scrambled to hold off constant attack. Unable to respond to multiple threats the East Bridgewater goalie closed the angle leaving the weak side of the goal unattended. Quickly, the Cohasset forward line combined for the first score of the game. At the half Cohasset led 1-0.

The second half tempo increased as East Bridgewater pressed to even the score. Connecting on a series of well placed passes, a streaking forward unleashed a tremendous shot off the cross bar and back into play. In an instant, a charging midfielder parted the Cohasset defense and netted the goal. Tie game. Cohasset hustled back to center to begin the final assault. From this point on the game belonged to Cohasset. Patient passing and ball control kept most of the action in the Cohasset attack zone. Once again the Cohasset forwards set their triangle, working the ball into the slot for an open shot into the back of the net. This textbook goal gave Cohasset a 2-1 victory and a place in the finals.

The 6-1 loss to undefeated Weymouth in the regular season was still fresh in Cohasset's collective consciousness as they stepped on the field. An overflow crowd packed the stands as both teams met at center field. The teams exploded into action. Drive after drive raced up and down the field seeking out the missed assignment or a defensive lapse. Each defender met these challenges with swift decision and solid play. This was a game where each advantage came with aggressive action and sometimes painful consequence. The action was fierce, bodies crashing as each team tried to establish field control. Solid from one end of the roster to the other, each Cohasset player pressed forward pushing Weymouth into a defensive stand. A shot rang off the post catching the Weymouth defense out of position. The rebound was quickly netted to give Cohasset a 1-0 lead.

A stunned Weymouth team used halftime to regroup and re-establish their attack. The second half began as the first ended. As time ticked away, the play intensified. Again and again, the teams pounded away at the opposing defense only to be stopped short of the net. Both goalies made impossible stops on lightening shots. Finally, Weymouth cracked the code and succeeded in netting a rare second chance, tying the game. With two minutes left to play, both benches poured it on, trying to end it in regulation. As the clock expired, both teams braced for overtime.

Barely able to hear the referee's instructions over the roar of the appreciative crowd, the teams prepared for sudden death overtime. A single goal would decide this contest. Right from the start, Cohasset pressed into the Weymouth end and put the ball on net. The Cohasset forwards swarmed the net, feet desperate to redirect the ball. The onslaught proved too much as the winning goal squirted through the goalies legs. Above the din of the crowd, the delirious cries of the Champions. Congratulations ladies, great game, great season…well done! Look out Amherst!

Junior catcher Casey Anderson and senior shortstop Danielle Pinkus each went five-for-five against South Shore Christian.

According to reports, the game was more like batting practice for Cohasset than a game.

Cohasset is enjoying the vacation week with no games scheduled, but wait until next week.

The Skippers have four away games scheduled, taking on Harwich on Tuesday, Norwell on Thursday, Holbrook on Friday and Carver on Saturday.

Freshman pitcher Christina Pinkus (Danielle's cousin) is scheduled to pitch against Harwich.

"Christina is a lefty who pitches fast. We feel the pitching of Christina will baffle the hard-hitting Harwich team," noted Bostwick.

The coach added: "We have some good pitching, and some very good hitting with Anderson and Danielle. We also have a pretty good hitter with freshman Laura Campedelli, who has been a big bat for us. We also have another pretty good bat with Cecilia Chapman, who has our best getting on base percentage.

"All in all, I think we have a pretty good team for a young team and we will certainly do better than last year's four wins."

Rec. Dept. offers safe boating course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session safe boating course offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the state of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the two-session course, which will be held on two consecutive Saturdays, May 8, and May 15, from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size, and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $40 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of the text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

David B. Perini, Jr. Memorial Tourney on May 10

At Hingham's Black Rock Country Club

Golfers are invited to help develop better treatments for childhood cancers and to provide services for survivors of these cancers by participating in the David B. Perini, Jr. Memorial Tournament. The event is slated to be held at the exclusive Black Rock Country Club in Hingham, Mass., on Monday, May 10.

This tournament will benefit the innovative David B. Perini, Jr. Quality of Life Program at Dana-Farber. The mission of the Perini Program is to continue to research ways of reducing or eliminating any harmful side effects of cancer treatments, and to help the increasing number of cancer survivors cope with any after-effects of their illness and treatment.

Featuring a scramble format with a shotgun start, the tournament also includes a post-tournament cocktail party, auction and dinner. Pre-registration is required. Tee-off for the David B. Perini, Jr. Memorial Tournament is scheduled for noon with registration beginning at 10 a.m. and the post-event party beginning at 5:30 p.m.

The contribution per player is $375, which includes golf, and the post-event activities; separate dinner tickets will be available for $100. Sponsor opportunities, including one or more golf slots, start at $500. For more information, contact Beth Partlow at (800) 552-6176 or email her at beth_partlow@dfci.harvard.edu.

The Perini Memorial is one of more than 150 Jimmy Fund Golf Program tournaments being held in 2004 to benefit the Jimmy Fund, a major fundraising arm of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. In its 21 seasons, the golf program has raised more than $36 million for cancer research and care for both children and adults at Dana-Farber.

Major sponsors of the Jimmy Fund Golf Program include American Airlines, Dunkin' Donuts, and Callaway/Top Flite, along with its Media Sponsor, Community Newspaper Company, Inc.

South Shore Sr. softball steps up to the plate for a fourth season

The South Shore Senior Softball League, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, opens its fourth season on Sunday, April 25. The team, open to all South Shore men aged 55 and older, meets at 10 am at the Central Park Field in Scituate.

Proving that age is no barrier to fun and athleticism, the "boys of summer" play up to three times a week in the league. Games are scheduled Sunday and Wednesday mornings at 10 am and Thursday evenings at 5 pm. There is also a traveling team available for interested players to compete in games across the state. Players can play once or three times a week, as they wish. The season runs well into the fall.

Kevin McLaughlin joins league founder Jim Hyde as league commissioner this year. Anyone interested in joining the league can call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 to obtain a registration form. Cost for the season is $30, which covers a shirt, hat and as much softball as one wants to play.

U14 Lady booters win indoor title

The Cohasset Girls U14 soccer team capped off their undefeated season with two exciting playoff games versus regional rivals Norwell and Holbrook and secured the Champions title in the U14 town division. The semi final round pitted Cohasset, 7 wins-0 losses, against Norwell, 5w-2l, a team known for its speed and size. Suffering a forfeit, Norwell's only on field loss had come at the hands of Cohasset. Their fourth place finish in the regular season offered them a shot at sweet revenge. Cohasset would give nothing away as the larger Norwell team used its size to bring all its power to bear upon the unyielding defense of Cohasset. Bending but never breaking, Cohasset countered powerful attacks with composed determination entering halftime down 2-1.

Demonstrating great patience and skill, the Cohasset Girls methodically wore down the Norwell attack. As in the first meeting, Norwell could not maintain their lead nor match the pace set by their opponents. Cohasset pressed the attack, firing shots from all angles, storming the net to redirect uncontrolled rebounds. The relentless pressure proved too much for the flagging Norwell defense. Four unanswered goals in the second half sealed Norwell's fate and catapulted Cohasset into the Championship game versus second place finisher Holbrook.

Holbrook would offer Cohasset little respite concerning size and aggressiveness. By quirk of schedule, these two teams were to meet for the first time in the championship game. Holbrook, 7 wins-1 loss, had defeated a skilled Select Club Team to get to the finals, avenging their only loss of the season. Both teams claimed rightful possession to the title yet to be decided. And the game disappointed no one.

Quick to start, Cohasset came out of the gate flying. Holbrook, older and bigger, used all their weapons to slow the Cohasset attack. Cohasset would not be denied as they peppered the Holbrook goalie with explosive shots. Cohasset players maintained perfect position, patiently disrupting every offensive attempt by Holbrook. Holbrook struggled to regain composure as the Cohasset players dominated the playing field. By halftime 3 Cohasset shots had found their mark giving Cohasset a comfortable 3-0 lead.

But Holbrook was not done yet. Halftime adjustments made, Holbrook and Cohasset raced back and forth across the pitch unable to finish their attacks. Excellent offensive play and solid defense dictated quick substitutions and counter moves by both benches to offset new offensive threats. Cohasset consistently staved off all attacks until late in the game. With less than 2 minutes to go in the game, Holbrook made their final attack. Scoring two quick goals, Holbrook narrowed the difference to 1 goal. That was all Cohasset would need. Settling the pace down, Cohasset skillfully out-maneuvered their opponent winning the game and championship 3-2. Well done, Ladies! Great Season! Great Team! Keep your eye on Amherst!

A whale of an effort

Lady laxers dominate New Bedford to reach .500 mark

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High girls lacrosse team got to the magic .500 mark with a decisive 12-4 decision over New Bedford last Thursday on the road.

The victory was the second in a row for the Lady Skippers and moved them to 2-2 on the season. A .500 record is needed for postseason qualification, and the Cohasset team's number one stated goal for this season is to get back to the state tourney for a third straight season.

Senior captain Nicole Turgiss (five goals) paced the offense in the win that got the Lady Skippers to 2-2 on the season with five goals against the host Whalers. Sophomore Lisa Spirito chipped in by burying three.

The girls were not scheduled to play during the April school vacation week. They're slated to get back into action this coming Tuesday afternoon at Scituate High (3:30 p.m. start). And then host Hingham on Thursday at Alumni Field.

After a tough first set, Graham and her opponent went back and forth again in the second set. One of the best points was match point. After trading several baseline volleys, Graham stopped a shot from her opponent, who had come up to the net, with a nice forehand for the victory.

The senior's effort did not go unnoticed by head coach Gigi Meehan.

"Holly is my star of the day," she said. "For her to step into that number one spot and win can only give her a lot of confidence in the number two spot."

In number one doubles, juniors Courtney Caron and Rachel Garber continued their impressive seasons with a straight-set, 6-2, 6-3 win over Ursuline's Brooke Haynes and Taylor Ferracane. Both girls showed quick reflexes at the net, and Caron smashed plenty of winners to win points.

Caron is now 3-0 in doubles play on the season, winning her first two matches against Duxbury and Abington with Chelsea Grossman, who moved up to number two singles against Ursuline.

Garber, meanwhile, is also 3-0, earning her first two victories in singles against Mashpee and Abington.

So, the overall team winning streak ended last Thursday at 25. Not a bad run, but the coach is understandably more interested in what is to come than what has already happened, calling last Thursday's loss a "wonderful learning tool."

"They just had the better team today," Meehan said. "The biggest thing is how you deal with the loss. I think it will make us hungrier."

Cohasset should face a couple good challenges next week, as they hit the road to take on Harwich on Tuesday and top rival Norwell on Thursday.

And, for anyone who may be interested, the rematch with Ursuline is scheduled for May 5 in Dedham.

Coastal Stars Youth Hockey

Squirt C3

"We're goin to the Ship" was the chant heard at ASIAF rink in Brockton Sunday morning after the Coastal Stars disposed of Weymouth by a score of 6-2 in a game where the team clicked on all cylinders. The Stars win puts them in the Yankee Conference championship game this Saturday at 11:50am at Pilgrim Arena.

The Stars jumped on the board early when the line of Willy Brown, Sam Labo and Vinny Calorio crashed the Hanover net and Brown punched one in from up close.

Not to be outdone, the line of Mike Masciulli, Ally Ryan and Johnny Sinkins upped the score to 2-0 on the very next shift.

Defenseman Justin Henriksen stifled a Hanover clearing pass and drilled it to Ally Ryan in the left slot, who rifled it just inside the left post.

Hanover refused to quit and tied the game with two quick goals to end the first period.

In the second period, Willy Brown put Stars ahead for good on a beautiful play where every Star touched the puck. Nick Craig cleared the puck from in front of his net to Ryan Foohey who fed Sam Labo streaking up the left side. Labo slid the puck over to Vinny Calorio who backhanded a beautiful pass to Brown at the right post for his second goal of the game.

Seconds later, Mike Masciulli put the game away for good when he took the center ice faceoff and skated right through the Hanover defense and rifled it into the top, right corner for an unassisted goal. On the subsequent center ice faceoff, it was déjà vu all over again as Masciulli went in uncontested for his second goal of the game.

With a three goal cushion, Netminder Alec "Hoover" Hurd tightened up his game, stifled a number of close range shots and more importantly, didn't allow any second chances.

The defensive pairings of Mike Timcoe with Henriksen and Foohey with Craig played solid defense the rest of the way and denied all Hanover puck-handlers the center of the ice. Ally Ryan and Masciulli combined for the final goal and put an exclamation point on the Stars victory. Saturday in Hingham, winner takes all. Go Stars!

No time to panic

gin in the third quarter and team-leading scorer Jake Previte buried his third goal of the game two minutes into the fourth quarter to tie the score at 8-8.

Sophomore Aidan Buick also scored two goals, to go along with an assist, and seniors Mark Davis and Rob Carpenter added solo tallies.

Unfortunately, the Skippers took a penalty a few minutes after that and Barnstable was able to capitalize on the man-up advantage to re-take the lead for good at 9-8.

The Skippers attack continued to buzz with the ball around the Barnstable cage, but a missed shot and quick transition led to a clean break-in on Cohasset goalie Nick Murphy (12 saves) and another goal.

Barnstable would put the final nail in the coffin in the waning minutes with another goal in transition, as the Skippers pinched up in an all-out assault.

"I thought our play in the second half was more representative of what we're capable of," asserted Curran. "We got some really strong efforts from a lot of players. (Senior captain) Mike Devine, in particular, played a great game."

Fortunately, the nice weather featured in this vacation week has allowed the Skippers to get in some good outdoor workouts, and Curran feels his team is ready to put forth a strong tape-to-tape effort against St. John's-Shrewsbury tomorrow in non-league play.

"St. John's is one of the better teams in the Catholic Conference, so I'm expecting a good battle," said Curran. "That'll be a good test to see how far we've come. I think we're ready to put the pedal to the metal now, but we'll just have to wait and see how we make out in the game."

The Skippers will get back into Pilgrim Conference play on Saturday afternoon (1 p.m. start) when they travel to Scituate to take on a much improved Sailors team (4-3). The next game after that will be next Friday, April 30, at Norwell (3:30 p.m. start).

The Skippers preceded this win with a big 10-8 victory last Monday over SSL rival Abington.

Bouncing back from a tough first mound outing, junior ace Ted Straughn struck out 14 to notch his first win, the last one for the final out of the game with the tying run on first base.

Junior catcher Louis Blanco knocked in two runs on three hits, including a triple. And senior right fielder Dan Tarpey had two hits, including a big two-run double double, and four RBI.

Dooley chipped in with two singles and an rbi.

The Skippers, off for the April vacation week, will get back into action on Tuesday when they host SSL rival Harwich (3:30 p.m. start) at Milliken Field. Norwell, who topped Straughn and the Skippers in the season opener, 10-6, comes to town on Thursday afternoon.

Taste of Hingham to serve up tons of food and fun

Event is May 1 from noon to 3

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

If three words could best sum up expectations for the upcoming inaugural Taste of Hingham celebration, they would likely be "loads of fun."

What better way to get a feel for the flavor of downtown Hingham than to take in its sights, sounds, and tastes on a leisurely Saturday afternoon?

The street fair is planned to breathe new life into the already popular area and increase awareness of what downtown Hingham has to offer. On Saturday, May 1, from noon to 3 p.m., (rain date is May 8) residents and visitors alike can experience its uniqueness by sampling the mouth-watering Chowderfest entries prepared by a number of local restaurants and taking a leisurely stroll through the Square down to the waterfront, stopping at the many specialty shops and other businesses along the way. Chowder tasters will have an opportunity to vote for the one they think is the best. Other food samples will be available from local restaurants, including appetizers, fine ethnic cuisine, ice cream, and other treats.

The event, sponsored by the Hingham Downtown Association (HDA), Hingham Congregational Church, Eat Well Corporation, and the Friends of Downtown Hingham, will also feature sidewalk sales, ethnic food, a variety of children's activities and attractions — including strolling animal characters and "Touch a Truck!" courtesy of Greenbush contractor Cashman Balfour Beatty, which will supply construction equipment for children of all ages to touch and pose upon — musicians, Thai dancers, and a fashion show for children and adults at Tosca. (See related sidebar).

Tickets are available in local shops and on the day of the event. The cost is $10 per person or $25 for a family to purchase a "bracelet" that enables the wearer to test – and enjoy – tasty food and attend the fashion show. Advance tickets are available at Noble's, Treasures, Nona's, Hennessy's and Bowl & Board.

"The Friends group is co-sponsoring the event to show the merchants of Hingham how much the town appreciates the convenience and ambiance of Hingham Square and the downtown area," said Kathy Joyce, founder of the Friends organization. "Not only is this a fabulous day for grownups to spend some time in downtown Hingham, but it is also a great opportunity for families with young children to spend a day in the Square, sampling the food, listening to music, and enjoying themselves while showing their support for the merchants. I hope the Taste of Hingham becomes as much a part of Hingham as Christmas in the Square and the Fourth of July parade."

Friends member Connie Coleman, who grew up in Hingham, remembers visiting the Bakers 5 & 10 when it was located in the Square, seeing movies at the Loring Hall Theatre, and buying an ice cream at Brigham's when she was a child. "Whether I walked or rode my bike, it was a destination that I sought out," she said. "Today the stores have changed, but the Square has developed and has a nice community feel to it."

The goal of the Friends is to create awareness of downtown businesses and to raise money for the promotion, revitalization, and beautification of the downtown area. "Christmas in the Square is great and well-attended every year," Joyce explained, "but we feel that there is much more opportunity to have festivals downtown that people can enjoy and that the merchants can profit from. I don't know if people are aware of how much a part of the community these merchants are, [often making donations to fund raisers townwide]. Many shop owners are also Hingham residents."

With all the construction going on in the Square, "it's important that the merchants know how much we love the hometown feeling that their shops and restaurants afford us," said Main Street resident Amy Happ, the mother of two elementary school children. "We ride our bikes to the Square and have ice cream. It's a nice treat for the kids and is quality time spent together as a family."

Participating restaurants include Muang Thai, 99 Restaurant, Bay Club, Brigham's, Corner Meat Market, Nona's Homemade Ice Cream, Rocky Neck Seafood, Stars, The Cove, The Fruit Center, Z-Chef, Bare Cove Gourmet, Caffe Tosca, Liberty Grille, South Shore Country Club, Tosca, Blackfin, Brewed Awakenings, The Snug, and the Square Café.

The event is the result of widespread cooperation among downtown merchants, businesses, and the various groups and individuals involved. Holly Andrus, Executive Director of the HDA, noted that "the first time for staging any major event such as Taste of Hingham is always a nerve-wracking experience. The HAD and Congregational Church have really appreciated the active participation of the folks at Eat Well Corporation, especially Greg Acerra, during the event planning."

In addition to entering three of Eat Well's restaurants in the Chowderfest, Acerra was instrumental in recruiting other restaurants and food purveyors to join in the effort, thereby adding to its success, according to Andrus. Tosca is hosting the fashion show.

Benefits charities

Net proceeds from bracelet purchases will benefit 22 South Shore charities, including Adult Day Service (Salvation Army), Affiliated Visiting Nurse, Amaryllis, Amego, Asaprosar, Dianne DeVanna Center, DOVE, Habitat for Humanity, the Hingham Food Pantry, Mary Martha Learning Center, Project Turnabout, Wellspring in Hull, Father Bill's Place, Hospice, Heifer International, Pine Street Inn, Quincy Crisis, Quincy Teen Mothers, Route 7 Mission Church, South Shore Women's Center, Sharing, and Foundation for Children of Haiti. Open access to the festival is free. The raindate is Saturday, May 8.

George MacKay, a member of the Hingham Congregational Church Men's Group which is helping to organize the Chowderfest, said the church was looking for a way to raise money for some of the charities it supports at the same time that HDA President Richard McManus was contemplating a Spring event for the downtown area. Combining efforts was the natural outcome.

"It seemed like a good way to draw people to the downtown area while at the same time raising money for local charities," MacKay said. "The event will benefit businesses which have been impacted by Greenbush construction and generate some funds for charities that have been hurt this past year because of the economic downturn."

Kathleen Picardi, owner of Johannah's Jewelry and Gifts on North Street, said business has "already picked up with the nice weather approaching. This spring festival will be fantastic for the shop owners here on North Street who seem to have had the most interruption in business since the construction began."

MacKay said the church's co-sponsorship of the Chowderfest is a "small way we can give something back to the community" out of gratitude for the town granting permission during the holiday season to sell Christmas trees in the Station Street parking lot. Proceeds from the tree sales help pay the expenses of church youth and others who travel to disadvantaged parts of the country every summer to rebuild houses, fix roofs, and help out in other ways.

A number of merchants and organizations will set up tables dressed up with linen tablecloths along the length of North Street from Mill to Station streets, including Hennessy's, Marc Brown Studio, The Hingham Journal, The Fluency Factory, Hingham Historical Society, and Hingham Symphony Orchestra.

There will be music courtesy of the South Shore Conservatory, face painters, ice cream, hair braiding, and make-your-own cookies. Special posters will be available for "Arthur" fans, courtesy of Marc Brown and Marc Brown Studios. All proceeds from their sale will go to the local charities.

For further information about Taste of Hingham or to volunteer to lend a helping hand, contact Hingham Downtown Association President Richard McManus at the Fluency Factory, (781) 749-7400.

To join the Friends of Hingham Square, call (781) 749-1036. Donations to the Friends may be sent to P.O. Box 527, Hingham, MA 02043.

"The Association, long concerned and helpful to all businesses in the downtown area, is reaching out more actively to every part of the community to protect and enhance the historical downtown," McManus said.

The Association, which began as the Hingham Square Business Association, has provided scholarships and support to local students and hosts the annual Summerfest and Christmas in the Square celebrations, which have drawn thousands of residents and visitors to the downtown area over the past 30 years.

Feed the Need Walk for Hunger

You can bring relief to families facing hunger by joining the Feed the Need 5K/10K Walk/Run at Wompatuck State Park on May 8. Your donation of nonperishable food items allows local food pantries to help those in need. Last year's Walk/Run raised over 4000 cans of food, feeding 32 families for one month, 60 housebound seniors, and more.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors anticipates that nationwide requests for emergency food from families will rise 91 percent in 2004.

The sad fact is that one in 12 households in Massachusetts goes hungry at times. The U.S. Conference of Mayors anticipates that nationwide requests for emergency food from families will rise 91 percent in 2004.

According to the 2000 U.S. Census, a sampling of towns on the South Shore reports that individuals living below the poverty level total 15,029 people. This figure includes a large number of children, as well as those 65 years or older.

Kids and adults can partner with Feed the Need at the annual 5K/10K Walk/Run at scenic Wompatuck State Park. Register at http://www.feedtheneed.org or on race day at 8 a.m.; race starts promptly at 9 a.m. Meet at the Wompatuck State Park Visitor's Center. Entry fee is a bagful of non-perishable canned goods. For information on Feed the Need or the Walk/Run, contact Jennifer Ashley at 781-925-4440 or visit the website.

PSO phone-a-thon televised live May 12

The Cohasset PSO is giving town residents a great reason to turn on their TV. on Wednesday, May 12, from 7 to 9 p.m. The PSO will be airing the annual phone-a-thon live via Comcast Cable Channel 10.

Any interested musician or ensemble should contact Nancy Froio at 781-383-1897 by May 1.

The annual phone-a-thon is the PSO's avenue for raising funds to support and enhance the learning environment and current school curriculum by providing enrichment programs, guest speakers, school equipment, teacher grants, teacher support and materials for all children in the Cohasset Public School system.

This year there will be a new format for the annual phone contribution drive. The live telethon will offer donors the opportunity to win raffle prizes based on their donation amounts. Also, a talent show will be a part of the evenings activities, with performances from children in all of the Cohasset Schools. Any interested musician or ensemble should contact Nancy Froio at 781-383-1897 by May 1. The musical talent show will try to accommodate all those who are interested.

The American Camping Association of New England's Advice to Parents:

PREPARE CHILDREN FOR HOMESICKNESS AHEAD OF TIME

School is out, the bags are packed and summer camp is here! Time for fun at the lake, late night ghost stories, s'mores and...homesickness! What should parents do to prepare their child ahead of time to help prevent anxiety over separation?

"The cure for a good old fashioned case of homesickness is preparation and patience. Parents have to do their part ahead of time to prepare their children for the summer camp experience with simulations and lots of communication. And, camp staff have to do their part by helping kids ease their case of missing home by letting them know they are safe and will have fun while away from home," says Bette Bussel, Director of ACA New England.

To combat homesickness, the following are tips for parents on what they can do, both ahead of time and during the separation, to ease fears and let the children get the most out of the experience:

• Encourage your child's independence throughout the year with sleepovers.

• Discuss what camp will be like before your child leaves, including role-playing anticipated situations, such as using a flashlight to find the bathroom.

• Reach an agreement ahead of time on calling each other. If your child's camp has a no phone calls policy, honor it.

• Send a note or care package ahead of time to arrive the first day of camp. Acknowledge, in a positive way, that you will miss your child. For example, say "I am going to miss you, but I know that you will have a good time at camp."

• Don't bribe your child to stay. Linking a successful stay at camp to a material object sends the wrong message. The reward should be your child's newfound confidence and independence.

• Pack a personal item from home, such as a stuffed animal.

• When a "rescue call" comes from the child, offer calm reassurance and put the time frame into perspective. Avoid the temptation to take the child home early.

• Talk candidly with the camp director to obtain his/her perspective on your child's adjustment.

• Don't feel guilty about encouraging your child to stay at camp. For many children, camp is a first step toward independence and plays an important role in their growth and development.

• Trust your instincts. Severe homesickness is very rare. However, a child that is not adjusting to camp after a reasonable amount of time should be allowed to return home.

"Camp is a positive experience and although kids are having fun and making new friends, it is not unusual to miss home. Parents should work with their children before going to camp, and reassure them that missing home can happen and they are capable of handling it," says Bussel.

Buttonwood drawing for American Girl Doll

Buttonwood Books and Toys is having an American Girl Doll Drawing for Kaya, the latest doll from The American Girls Collection. Kaya is an adventurous Nez Perce girl living in 1764 whose deep love of horses and respect for nature nourish her spirit. Kaya dreams of becoming a courageous leader for her people who's ready to meet whatever the future brings. She draws strength from her family, the legends her elders tell, and the bold warrior woman who is her hero. And she learns that the choices she makes affect all Nez Perce people. The doll drawing package includes an 18-inch doll from The American Girls Collection, along with accessories, stand and paperback book. Entry forms are available at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset. No purchase required. You need not be present to win. The drawing is Friday, April 30.

Abbey plant sale

The Glastonbury Abbey Plant sale will be held from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Saturday, May 8.

A large selection of plants will be available for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Rt. 28) in Hingham.

Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses, bushes, fruits and vegetables will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local private gardens in the South Shore area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in Abbey gardens. Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who attend the sale. Proceeds go to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue beautification of the Abbey Grounds.

Boston Pops benefit for S.S. Art Center

This summer, the South Shore Art Center kicks off its 50th anniversary celebration with a benefit performance of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, Keith Lockhart conductor in Cohasset, July 31.

The concert brings the world-renowned artistry of Keith Lockhart and the Pops to the South Shore for the first time ever. The South Shore Music Circus' intimate summertime setting is the perfect place to enjoy the incomparable virtuosity of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra while supporting the education and exhibition programs at the South Shore Art Center. South Shore residents can enjoy the internationally acclaimed Boston Pops right in their own backyards.

A limited number of special ticket packages, which include receptions with maestro Keith Lockhart before and after the concert, can be purchased from the South Shore Art Center only. Call the Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org for more information about these gala benefit events. All other tickets for this Pops concert can be purchased via Ticketmaster at 617-931-2787 or in person at the Music Circus box office beginning Saturday, April 10. The performance is July 31, at 7 p.m. Tickets are priced at $101.25 and $90.25.

Sixth-graders aren't shy about being on stage

Eamon Davis, Brendan Doonan and Philip Galligan kick off the night with the first song.

The entire group sings along with the Village People and the Y-M-C-A!

The Cohasset PSO sponsored a "Pizza and Karaoke Night' at Deer Hill recently. Of the 135 students in the sixth-grade class, about 90 participated. Once the kids got the hang of things, there was a constant stream of students waiting for their turn on stage...no stage fright here!

Thanks to the following parents for chaperoning: Diane Shipp, Joyce Driscoll, Sandy Crough, Liz Richardson, Ann Dooley, Adrienne MacCarthy, Carrie Brown and Susan Galligan.

John Maher an Dean Driscoll share a laugh.

The girls gather for a quiet tune – the theme from "the Titanic."

The guys follow along at pizza and karaoke night.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

All-school PSO meeting

The All School PSO meeting will be held on Tuesday, April 27, at 7 p.m. at the Middle/High School. All parents of Cohasset Public School children are welcome.

The P.S.O. will be talking about volunteer opportunities for next year -including openings at the Osgood, Deer Hill, Middle/High Schools. There are many committees like Fundraising, PAC (parents advisory council), METCO, Diversity and more.

Also, the P.S.O. Executive Council is looking for a Treasurer to take over the accounting duties.

Come and check out the organization and volunteer opportunities; you might find the perfect job for you.

Summer Institute offers courses at student center

Go on line at www.cscr.org for complete course descriptions and to sign up:

• Gulf River and Cohasset Harbor Field Study and Research Project (for students entering grades 10, 11, or 12)

This project focuses on collecting water quality data in two of our watershed's important bodies of water — the Gulf River and Cohasset Harbor.

• Micro Bacteriological Field Study (for students entering grades 10, 11 or 12)

There are several water bodies in Cohasset that seem to be attributable to leaking septic systems. Bacteriological Field Studies represents an opportunity to investigate any number of these water bodies. New technology in monitoring enterococci bacteria will be available this summer at CSCR, thanks to a grant from the Lighthouse Keepers Corporation.

• The Clean Water Act Phase II Research Project: (for students entering grades 9- 12)

The landmark Clean Water Act, Federal legislation requiring cities and towns to develop plans to protect all water bodies, now requires that the town of Cohasset implement phase II of the Stormwater Management Plan. This plan requires monitoring the water that is discharged into streams, rivers, ponds and harbors when snow melts or rain falls.

• Aquaculture: an MIT funded research project begun by Kelly Hurley. (for students entering grades 9- 12)

This is a project funded by MIT's GEMS program (Grants for Excellence in Marine Science.) CHS student, Kelly Hurley, initiated this project, applied for funding, and has executed this project as an independent project during her senior year.

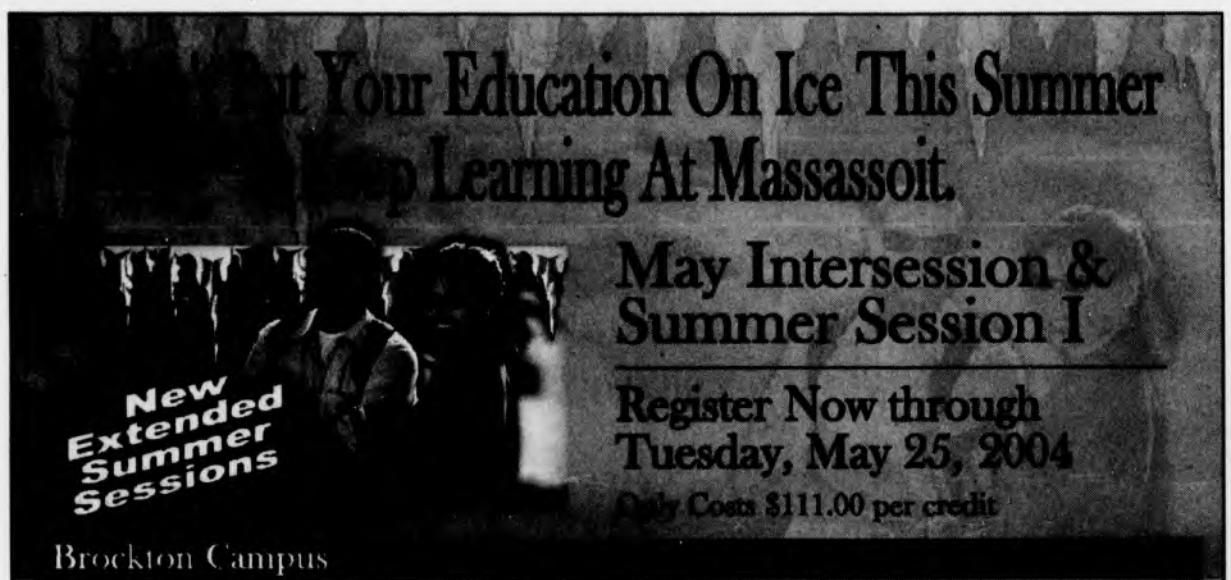
Disabled veterans meet at Glastonbury



The Lt. Ralph Talbot Disabled American Veterans Chapter 65 is sponsoring an information-sharing meeting to be held on Saturday, May 1, beginning at 9:30 a.m. and not lasting more than about one hour at the new Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center.

Chapter 65 "Serves Those Who Served" in the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth. They perpetuate the memory of fallen comrades, assist members and their families who are in need and keep the membership advised of their benefit entitlements. Of particular note is the role the National Service Officers play in providing free representation for those who need help in presenting disability claims to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

DAV membership eligibility is open to anyone wounded, injured, or disabled during honorable service or while engaged in extra-hazardous service under conditions simulating war.

The DAV hopes that the meeting will result in added memberships and more active participation in the local Chapter so that they can continue to help those who have suffered from the horrific wounds of war. A National Service Officer from the JFK Federal Building, as well as veterans' agents from the six towns have been invited.

The Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center is on the left-hand side of Rte 228, about/mile beyond the intersection of Rtes 228 and 3A. As you near the Abbey, the road splits and you should bear left toward Hull(not Cohasset), take the first left after the main driveway. The Conference Center is handicapped accessible with parking.

Utilizing Personality Typing to Better Understand Your Child

Julia Swartz, MSW, LICSW, CEIS and Nancy Pando, LICSW have joined forces to help solve the puzzle of how the personality is "hard wired." We come to this earth with our own temperament, as unique to an individual as his or her soul. Having an understanding of this increases effective communication, removes blame and gives greater clarity to all types of relationships. Families report a significant improvement in interactions as a result of personality typing.

WHEN: Saturday, May 1, 2004
9:00am - 12:30pm

WHERE: The Sheraton Tara Hotel
Braintree, MA

HIGHLIGHTS
- Specific hands-on parenting techniques: communication, limit setting, why children misbehave, play and peer relationships
- The importance of truly "seeing" your child and having realistic expectations based on personality type
- Understanding behavior that confuses and frustrates parents
- Background and history of personality typing

The cost of this workshop is $85.00 per person, $150.00 per couple; $95.00 at the door. If you are interested in attending please call 781.828.8955

Detective graduates from FBI Academy

On March 19, 2004, Detective Sergeant Gregory Lennon of the Cohasset Police Department graduated from the FBI National Academy in Quantico, Virginia. The 216 Session of the National Academy consisted of two hundred and forty-four law enforcement officers from all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, 24 international countries, two military organizations and three federal law enforcement agencies. FBI Director Robert S. Mueller, III, was the principal speaker at the ceremony.

Internationally known for its academic excellence, the National Academy program, held at the FBI Academy, offers 10 weeks of advanced investigative, management and fitness training for selected officers.

Lennon also earned a "Yellow Brick" after completing the FBI National Academy fitness challenge which requires voluntary participants to complete six successive runs over the course of the six weeks, beginning at 1.8 miles and culminating in a 6.1 mile run over rough terrain at the Marine Corps obstacle course known as the Yellow Brick Road, located on Marine Corps Base Quantico where the FBI academy is housed. The fitness challenge runs are in addition to the regimen of physical training classes held throughout the ten-week academy.

Flag depository at Cohasset Legion Post

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 on Summer Street in Cohasset (across from Kimball's) has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag.

The solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

OBITUARIES

Mary Louise Quigley Roy

Mary Louise Quigley Roy, the daughter of Irish immigrants, a schoolteacher, the mother of five, and a driving force behind the success of her family's business, died on March 17 at the age of 86. She was a resident of Cohasset.

Mary's determination and strong spirit were evident from her earliest years. When Mary, a child of recent immigrants, was in elementary school, she desperately wanted to go to a birthday party for one of her schoolmates, a girl from an established family in the neighborhood. Though the girl's aunt, Mrs. Bailey, had not invited her to attend, Mary put on her best dress and shoes, walked next door, and rang the doorbell. "Little Mary Quigley, don't you look wonderful!" exclaimed Mrs. Bailey, who then invited her to join the party and gave her cake and ice cream. Throughout her life, Mary believed that if you prepared well, any door could open.

Born Christmas Day, 1917, Mary Louise Quigley grew up in Milton, where her father worked as a stocker in the Economy Grocery store. Although he never finished high school, her father was a voracious reader and set high standards. Mary received straight A's at Milton High School, then attended Bridgewater State College and became a schoolteacher.

The summer after high school, she went to work as a waitress in a hotel in Kennebunkport, Maine. At a dance in the town hall she met another summer worker, John Reime Roy. Although he had lived in an orphanage and contracted polio as a child, he was handsome and energetic, and Mary was certain he would be her future husband. The couple was married for 57 years until his death in 1999.

They had three sons and two daughters. Mary Roy, the former schoolteacher, made sure her children succeeded at school. All five went to college, and collectively they earned seven degrees from Harvard and MIT. Mary led by example as well: at the age of 50, she earned a master's degree in psychology from Boston University. A Boston newspaper ran an article about her under the headline, "Master's Degree for Mother of Five – A Average!"

When her husband decided to start his own company, an engineering and construction firm, Mary began her business career. The couple started by working out of their home with help from their children – and ultimately about 25 employees. The children had to make their beds early every morning so that engineers and draftsmen could set up their tables in the bedrooms and begin work at 8 am.

At age 67, Mary Roy became Chairman of the Board after her husband suffered a stroke and their children transformed the business into a successful energy company. She played a major role in developing relationships with Fortune 500 companies and helped negotiate many important contracts, including a $600 million project with financing led by Chase Manhattan Bank. During one tense negotiation, the CEO of a large utility quipped that he was dealing with a "dragon lady." Mary Roy took it as a compliment.

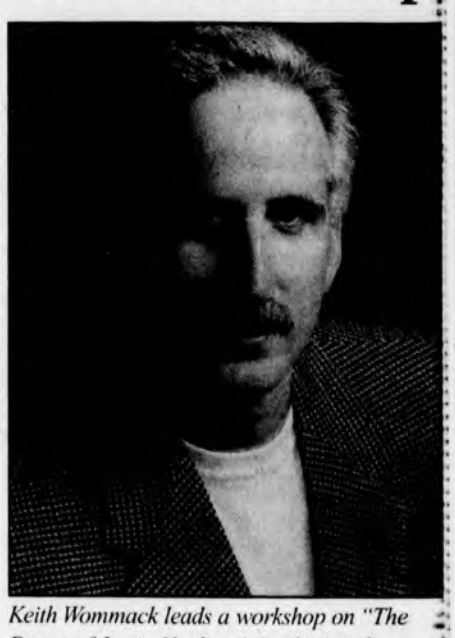
After she retired at age 79, Mary Roy led the way in bestowing a lasting pair of initiatives on Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government – one for the Environmental and Natural Resources Program and the other for the Women's Leadership Program.

Mary Roy leaves her sons Stephen and Peter; her daughters Jane Roy Lauretti and Ellen Roy Herzfelder; and 12 grandchildren.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home handled the arrangements.

Joy and health focus of workshop

By Molly Larsen
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER



Have you ever wondered what role "joy" plays in your health? I don't mean the "happy-go-lucky," "have a good day" joy that's on in the good times but absent when things get rocky but that rich, good quality that pulls you through the most difficult of times as well as the sunny days. Joy that is a positive force for good, joy that can remain unshakeable in your life and your health is the subject of an upcoming workshop.

"The Power of Joy in Healing" is the topic of a remarkable workshop on spiritual healing given by Keith Wommack, CSB on Sunday, April 25, at 3 p.m. in the Hingham Public Library. This workshop will give practical advice on how joy can bring about healing for our health and our lives. If you are interested in this topic or the discussion of the mental nature of reality, stop by!

The speaker, Keith, was always drawn to expressing joy. For many years before he became an international speaker and spiritual healer, he was a musician. He was always the sensitive, "soul-filled" type. He taught himself how to play the guitar at age 9 and began a music career at age 13. His professional career included sharing the stage with stars such as Stevie Ray Vaughn, Elvis Costello, Journey, Edgar Winter and many others. While he was on the road in the 1970s, he began to explore in depth some of the ideas found in Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy. As he started this exploration, he began to feel a deeper sense of joy, not just the thrill of audience reaction. People around him began to notice that he turned to prayer to solve problems and they were solved!

One night during the performance, there was a race riot. He went out the back stage door and got caught in the middle of it. Right there in that chaos, the spiritual idea came to him that "Divine Love has no opposite sides." Even though he was punched in the head, he remained uninjured. He felt Love's presence in the midst of chaos and it saved him!

Gradually his love of spirituality and his love of helping others, began to over power his love of music. So, he went into the full time healing practice as a Christian Science practitioner and then a teacher of Christian Science. Christian Science, by the way, is less about a church than it is about the laws of God available to everyone to heal and to save.

Keith Wommack leads a workshop on "The Power of Joy in Healing" April 25 at the Hingham Public Library.

In 1992 he married his wife Joanne and became an instant dad to two boys. Since then he's been a Little League baseball coach for six years and an assistant Scout Master for Boy Scouts for five years.

Each one of us has a unique story to tell about our journey to where we are today but none of us needs to feel deprived of joy. This quality is essential to our nature as a loved child of God. Please come and explore more of these spiritual ideas on Sunday, April 25, at the Hingham Public Library at 3 p.m. We hope to see you there!

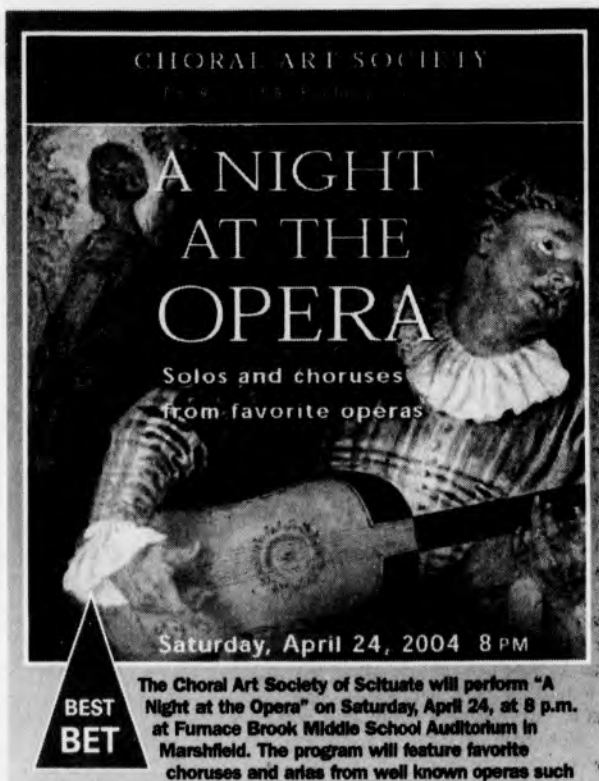
Joan Rivers tells it like it is and makes it funny



Joan Rivers has never been one to shy away from a controversial subject. Rivers doesn't even mind talking about plastic surgery, she just wishes other celebrities were as honest. "It annoys me when all these actresses say they've had nothing done," explained the 70-year-old comedienne by telephone recently from her New York office. "Believe me, anyone over 55 with a firm jaw has had something done. My feeling is that everybody wants to look good, so just do it."

Rivers legendary candor — as well as the taut visage she exhibits most often these days on the red carpet at awards shows — will no doubt be front and center when she brings her new one-woman-show, "Joan Rivers Broke and Alone...in Boston" to town later this month. "I love show business, and my standup comedy act is at the root of everything else in my career," says the actress, author, Tony nominee, Emmy Award-winner, and jewelry pitchwoman. "It is great, because you can say anything you want. The nice thing about it is that the rules are your rules, and that shapes everything. You can go as far as you want to go. My act changes all the time. It is about life and death and old people having sex. It's about my daughter, Melissa, and her baby boy and how he hates me. I also make sure to work in ethnic groups and stereotypes, says Rivers.

And a Hollywood icon or two. "When Charlton Heston announced he had Alzheimer's, I wasn't surprised. He's been wearing his wig sideways for years."

Joan Rivers will be at the Wilbur Theatre, 106 Boylston Street, Boston, April 29-May 1. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.broadwayinboston.com.

CHARITABLE FUNDS AVAILABLE

The George E. Curtis Trust is accepting applications from charitable organizations that provide nursing care, day care, respite care or home care for low income adults who are handicapped, disabled or infirm. To be eligible for the grant award, the charitable organization must be able to use the fund in Plymouth County and contiguous towns. Priority will be given to those programs that order direct aid to eligible individuals in their homes by maintaining such individuals in his or her home so as to improve the quality of home life.

Funds are also available to assist in the design, construction and equipment facilities for use by low income adults who are handicapped, disabled or infirm so as to improve the quality of their living arrangements. Individuals are not eligible for funding. The deadline for submitting a completed application is July 9, 2004.

Applications are available by sending a written request to:

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

CERUMEN MANAGEMENT

Cerumen (earwax) management is particularly important for those who wear hearing instruments, as accumulations of earwax can adversely affect hearing and the operation of the instrument. Particularly in small ears, even small amounts of earwax can change the clarity of the hearing instrument by shifting the "pitch" to the wrong place. With this in mind, hearing-instrument wearers should carefully review the cleaning instructions for their instruments. They should be carefully cleaned after they are removed for the night. Earwax softeners may also help by making it easier for earwax to migrate out of the ear on its own. If more help is needed, enlist the aid of your hearing specialist in managing your earwax.

At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we want to do all we can to help you become aware of the importance of protecting your hearing and the ways you can improve the quality of your life through clear sound and communication. Please stop by 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, get acquainted, and find out what's new in the hearing instrument industry. We think you'll be both amazed and impressed by the new technology. PH: 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. Earwax care may include counseling about regular ear flushing and removal with a special tool.

Woes over flows

Library leaching field too close to town wells

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With a denial for a sewer connection and potential problems with a proposed leaching field behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library — the town may be running out of options in terms of wastewater disposal for the Cook project.

Northland Residential, the developers the town is working with to build multi-unit senior housing on the Cook site, were denied access to town sewer Monday, and without that connection, the town must rely more heavily on the prospect of sending wastewater down Sohier Street to a leaching field behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

However, the water commis-

Concern mounts at harbor boatyard

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Commercial fishing is one of the oldest professions in the town of Cohasset, and both locals and outside experts are concerned the planned renovations to the Mill River Boatyard will change and ultimately destroy that industry forever.

Current businesses have been given eviction notices and will not be asked to return once construction is complete, and Jay Michaud of the Massachusetts Fishing Partnership said he was asked to visit Cohasset for what he considers to be an emergency situation.

Michaud, who is also a commercial fisherman, has been working on a South Shore outreach project to help communities understand how the decisions they make with their waterfront property can impact and potentially destroy their local fishing industry. He said while the buildings in Cohasset may be restricted to marine use, that doesn't necessarily mean it supports the endeavors of the local fisherman. If a marine business is brought in which is

Highest honor for Kristen James

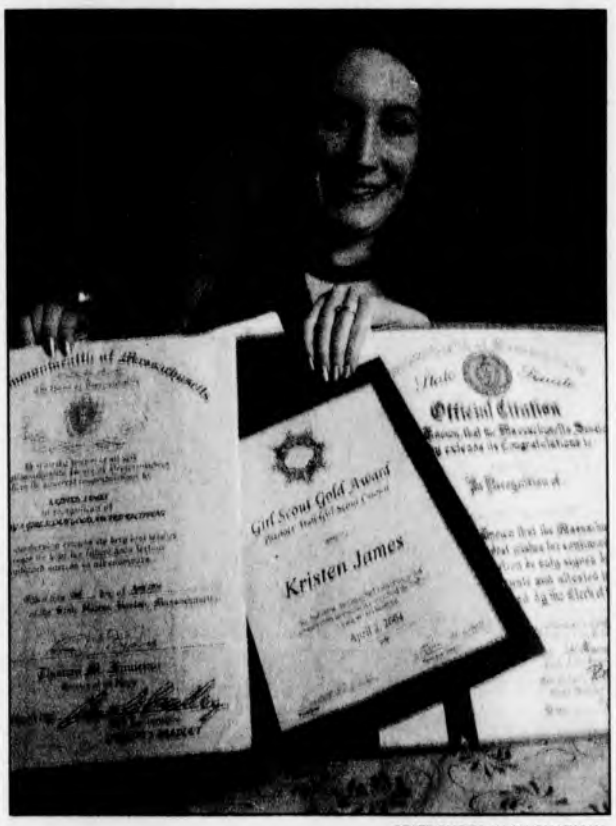
Local Girl Scout earns Gold Award

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At 17 years old, Kristen James has been given commendations from some of the highest officials in the state. She has received an official citation from the State Senate, another certificate from the House of Representatives, and a letter from Massachusetts Senator John Kerry. She has also heard letters are on their way from both NASA and President Bush.

Kristen chose to create a movie and pamphlets exposing girls to non-traditional vocations as her Gold Award project.

While she never expected to receive all these accolades, her achievement deserves recognition, as she recently earned her Girl Scout Gold Award, the highest and most prestigious honor a Girl Scout can receive.



Kristen has been a Girl Scout for the past 13 years. When she started as a Daisy Scout, her troop was filled with little girls eager to come to their weekly meetings. However, over the years while her troops have slowly pared down, Kristen stuck with it, and was this year's only graduating Senior Girl Scout in Cohasset.

"I've been the only one for a couple of years," she said, adding at one point there were two other girls who were at the Senior level, but they have since graduated, and there are currently some Cadette Girl Scouts who are working toward earning their Silver Awards. However, even in a troop by herself, she said she really enjoys being a Girl Scout and is glad she has come so far.

To earn a Gold Award, a Girl Scout must first complete four interest project awards on topics related to her proposed Gold Award project. She must then earn a career exploration pin, a Senior Girl Scout leadership award, a Senior Girl Scout challenge pin, and then finally plan and implement her Gold Award project, which must be approved by a Girl Scout council member. The project must encompass at least 50 hours of work and must serve even those who are not Girl Scouts.

As a senior at the South Shore Vocational Technical High School in Hanover, Kristen has been an advocate for spreading the word to young girls that there are professions out there which are considered non-traditional and can be very rewarding. At her school's open house night, Kristen had made a poster to help the incoming students become more aware of their options. When the time came to decide on her Gold Award project, one of her teachers suggested she expand on her poster, and Kristen thought it was a great idea.

girls in their non-traditional shop classes and let them share why they picked the career path they are on rather than a "regular" career. She interviewed girls on various career paths from auto body to electronics to welding.

"There are only around 30 or 40 girls in my grade," said Kristen, which is why she thinks her project is so important. While Kristen said she understands some girls will want to pursue more traditional careers like nursing, she hopes her project will open their eyes to all the possibilities they have before them. "I gave the girls a little nudge," toward exploring something out of the mainstream, she said.

In order to achieve her gold award, Kristen first had to make it through all the prior levels of scouting, which included earning

Local boy makes good (comedy) in Cohasset

By Cynthia McManus
CORRESPONDENT

A quick look at his long list of career accomplishments would convince most people that Cohasset native Lance Norris is a very versatile guy.

Currently one of the loony residents of WZLX's morning drive-time show, "Steve Sweeney's Neighborhood", Norris has in the past also offered his edgy take on life in America as a writer for such network television programs as Bill Maher's "Politically Incorrect". He cut his teeth in stand-up during what has come to be known as the Golden Age of Boston comedy in the late '70s and early '80s, an era that gave birth to the careers of such talents as Sweeney, Denis Leary and Jay Leno. He has appeared as an actor on television and in films that include "Mystic River", "The Mouse" and "With Honors".

Now he can add "Producer", "Promoter" and "Genial Host" to that list.

Norris, who lives the self-described "Life of a Country Gentleman" in Cohasset, has just opened The Bitter Man, a new 120-seat comedy club at Cohasset's Red Lion Inn — and, so far, he's having a ball.

"It was great," Norris said, referring to last week's sold out opening night show. "If this keeps up, we may have to go to two shows a night."

The idea to open a comedy club on the South Shore "came together in about two weeks" according to Norris, who noted that "I didn't do any research or planning, it just sort of happened."

Cohasset's Lance Norris has opened a comedy club at the Red Lion Inn.

As he soon discovered, there are very few comedy clubs on the South Shore.

"My wife and I had gone out to dinner and we wanted to do something afterwards but didn't want to drive into Boston — and there really wasn't anything. We ended up having ice-cream at Wilbur's and going home, and I thought, 'this is silly'."

The Bitter Man (named after Norris' wildly funny comic bit from the legendary Boston radio show "The Big Mattress") was born that night.

"It just seemed like the right time", he explained. "I've known Gerry [Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide] for about 17 years and we'd talked about opening a comedy club on and off for a while, but the timing just wasn't right for one rea-

Water main flushing to continue on May 3

The Water Department began flushing water mains April 26 and will continue through May 31. Flushing will take place on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m.. Flushing will continue next week with the following schedule:

May 3 – Route 3A from Pond Street to Hingham Lumber; Sohier Street from Route 3A to the Deer Hill School; Sanctuary Pond Road; Red Fox Run and Fairoaks Lane.

May 4 – King Street from Route 3A to No. Main Street; Forest Street; Cedar Street; No. Main Street from Forest Street to Redgate Lane and streets off these streets.

May 5 – Jerusalem Road from Forest Street to Atlantic Avenue and all streets off this section of Jerusalem Road.

Residents will be provided advance notification in the Patriot Ledger and Cohasset Mariner of the schedule for flushing each segment of the system. In addition, temporary street signs will be placed strategically around the affected area on the day of flushing. Notice will also be provided on the Water Dept.'s web site, www.cohassetwater.org and on the local cable access channel, Channel 10. Residents should monitor the web site and the cable channel for schedule changes.

"Flushing cleans out sediment and deposits which may have accumulated in the water mains and is an important part of the continuing efforts to improve drinking water quality to our customers," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission.

Do not wash clothes during the time the flushing occurs. If clothing becomes stained it can be cleaned by using "Iron Out" which is available for free from the Water Department.

During the flushing program, some temporary discoloration of the water may occur. Run the COLD water faucet, preferably outside, for a short time until the discoloration clears. If your water is discolored, avoid using hot water until you flush your hot water tank by opening the valve at the bottom of the tank.

Please call the Water Department at (781) 383-0057 with any questions.

Water Plant tours on Sunday, May 2

The Water Department is offering the public tours of the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, 339 King St. from 1-3 p.m. on Sunday, May 2.

The tours are offered as part of the Water Commission's observance of Drinking Water Week, which is May 2-8 this year, and their ongoing public education program. During Drinking Week tours will also be given to some Cohasset High School classes.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Board of Health, May 18, 7 p.m.

Conservation Commission, May 5 and May 20, 7:30 p.m.,

Library Trustees, May 12, 7 p.m., at the library on Ripley Road

Planning Board, May 5, 7 p.m.

Recreation Commission, May 11, 6 p.m.

Selectmen, May 4, 7:30 p.m.

Water Commission, May 6 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

Zoning Board of Appeals, May 4, 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless indicated otherwise. Call the Town Clerk at 781-383-4100 for updates.

Brush at the RTF

Residential brush will be accepted through April 30. No trees over 3 inches in diameter. No contractors please.

Service provider for sewer backups

There has been a change of service to all customers with grinder pumps, previously if you had an alarm or sewer backup Rosano-Davis would be the service provider to call. Recently the Town has changed contractors. Now all Sewer Customers must call either the Wastewater Treatment Plant at 781-383-1519 or Williamson Electric at: 800-287-9000 or 617-394-5060.

As previously advised before, it is necessary for the Commission to back charge its sewer customers for the town's cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls. Please discontinue the introduction of the following items into the Sewer System: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary napkins, shells, towels.

Household hazardous product collection

Cohasset will have a joint hazardous waste collection day with Hull from 9 a.m.-1p.m., June 5 at a location to be announced.

Accepted materials include solvents, gasoline, motor oil mixtures and other automotive fluids, pesticides, photography chemicals, pool chemicals, acids and bases, thermometers, thermostats and poisons. Materials not accepted include industrial waste, radioactive materials, pathological and medical waste, pressurized gas cylinders, auto batteries and explosives. Paint, motor oil, propane tanks, fluorescent lamps and NiCd (rechargeable) batteries are collected regularly by many towns and may not be accepted at some collections. Latex paint is nonhazardous, and may be dried and disposed with trash. Bring chemicals in their original containers or labeled clearly as to their contents. Clean Harbors will conduct the collections.

Residents who turn in a toxic mercury thermometer or other mercury item may swap it for a digital thermometer. Visitors' mercury waste may be disposed but not swapped. Swaps sponsored by American Ref-Fuel at SEMASS or Mass. DEP.

For more detailed information and directions, call the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318. Claire Sullivan, Solid Waste Planner.

Large housing projects line up for sewer access

Court ruling not a setback, developer says

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In an April 21 decision, a Superior Court Judge has denied a local developer's request to seek a court order preventing other projects from hooking up to the town's sewer system.

Kelli Calhoun, one of the principals behind the proposed 105-unit Cedarmere project, said the judge denied the injunction, which would have stopped sewer connections for other developments from moving forward, but would not have stopped Little Harbor's planned connection. However, she said the decision left the door open for Cedarmere to seek an injunction again, should other developers be granted access to the sewer.

"Should a project or some other party come before the Sewer Commission and be granted a connection with similar flows, we can resubmit the injunction," she said, which would assure Cedarmere keeps its place as first in line for a sewer hookup.

Access to the town's sewer lines has been a contentious topic for years, but the matter has reached new heights as the list of projects in town looking for connections continues to grow.

Cedarmere contends the town has enough capacity for their senior housing project and has filed a suit against the town. The proposed 200-unit Avalon project off Rte. 3A has spent considerable sums looking for wastewater alternatives because Avalon developers were told the sewer access was not feasible. Now, it appears Avalon wants to preserve its right to sewer access and has joined the Cedarmere suit.

In addition, the town-sponsored Cook Estate senior housing project has to look off-site for a leaching field. A sewer connection application for that project was denied Monday.

Then there is the Little Harbor area, whose residents have been waiting patiently for the town sewer to be extended down Atlantic Avenue. Town Meeting has appropriated money to keep that project in the works.

Calhoun said the recent ruling will have no effect on the current Cedarmere lawsuit against the town and the development will continue to move forward.

Principals Kelli and David Calhoun, 2 Sheldon Road, and Tom Ragno of Lexington, claim in their lawsuit, filed Nov. 25, 2003 that their development has the right to a sewer hookup because there is enough capacity to accommodate for the project, even though the sewer commission and its engineers say there is not. Cedarmere's engineers are from Fay, Spofford, and Thorndike, the company that designed Cohasset's wastewater treatment plant.

The sewer commission said it would like to wait a few more years to see how the wastewater treatment plant handles the current properties being connected before adding anyone else. The Cedarmere developers say they have provided a no-impact proposal, because they would upgrade the system to accommodate increased capacity.

Avalon, a 40B project slated to be built off Route 3A, has filed a motion to intervene or join in the Cedarmere lawsuit. Avalon never filed a sewer service application because developers were told from the beginning there is no capacity, and therefore, they have pursued alternate means of wastewater disposal from the start.

Cedarmere filed its sewer service application first, followed by Northland Residential—the developers currently looking to build multi-unit housing at the former Cook Estate off Sohier Street — then Avalon. However, Avalon, which would have a state subsidy under 40B, came to town first, so to speak, filing for a comprehensive permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals back in 2002. A comprehensive permit allows higher density than would otherwise be allowed under zoning in exchange for providing 20-25 percent affordable housing. It is not clear if Avalon — whose developers say they acted in good faith in pursuing alternative wastewater options — would be allowed a sewer connection if Cedarmere wins its lawsuit.

Leaching field too close to wells

sion says it isn't so sure that would be a viable alternative.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said at this point, if Northland tried to get a groundwater discharge permit, he believes the Department of Environmental Protection wouldn't grant it. He said the commission's engineers have been working closely with the town's engineers and have been looking at the soils, but because of the close proximity of the library site to both the Sohier Street and the Ellms Meadow well fields, he is concerned a leaching field could have an adverse effect on the environment.

"We have no position on the project, we just want to make sure its drainage doesn't affect the water supply," said McNabb, adding he hopes the water commission can work with the town to find a solution that will guarantee the water supply's safety. He said he has been "in the loop" from the very beginning, but has definite concerns with having a leaching field on the site.

Kevin Klein of Norfolk Ram, the water commission's consulting engineer, echoed McNabb's sentiments. "It's too close to the existing two well fields there," he said.

Klein explained to tell whether the site would affect the well fields, a hydrogeologic study must be conducted. During that process, the flow of water would need to be studied to determine how it moves through the soil. For this project, the travel time of water from the leaching field to the wells would have to be two years, and preliminary tests indicate that will not be the case.

While Klein said "it is possible" DEP could grant the permit, it most likely would not. The DEP could set up an additional set of treatment guidelines the project would have to comply with and condition the permit on those guidelines being met, but that would cost more money. It would also be very difficult to provide the levels of treatment necessary on the site to make the leaching up to DEP standards.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Health Agent Joseph Godzik said the situation with the Cook property "is not as dire as the water commission thinks it is," adding exploring on the library site is not over yet, and he will continue to work with the other boards in town to find a solution that satisfies them all.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library site was looked into after soils on the Cook property were deemed unsuitable for accommodating an on-site septic system for more than 10,000 gallons per day. The Cook development would discharge roughly 14,000 gallons per day. The library is located on the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street, and is seven-tenths of a mile away from the Cook property. In order to drain wastewater from the Cook site to the library, pipes would have to be laid down Sohier Street — which would mean digging up the road.

Last fall, voters at the Fall Special Town meeting allocated $4.5 million for the purchase of the 22-acre parcel of Cook-owned property, located at the top of Sohier Street, which has been combined with the adjacent 8.7 acres of town property, and marketed to developers. The town will sell the combined parcels to Northland Residential for $5.425 million for senior housing. There will be a double closing, transferring the property from the Cooks to the developer, and therefore money will not be expended by the town. Because the town has a closing deadline of October, time is of the essence.

During the public hearing for the sewer application Monday, Jack Dawley of Northland Residential said looking into a leaching field on the Cook property has brought the project back to ground zero. He added while the timeline is not unreasonable, it will take at least another 90 days before they are able to see if the site is feasible. The town originally had planned to pass papers on the property with the Cook Estate heirs this July. At the beginning of April, the town was granted an extension until Oct. 31 of this year. After that date, the town may request two additional 30 day extensions, but must pay $20,000 for each 30-day period.

Because of the uncertainty with the library field, Dawley said municipal sewer was a logical alternative. However, the sewer commission said it would have to deny the permit because having enough capacity at the plant is questionable especially in light of the existing homes that are in line for connections. Commissioners said they need at least a year once all planned hook-ups are completed to determine any excess capacity. "If you want to get something done, don't look to us," said Sewer Commission Chairman Raymond Kasperowicz.

Kasperowicz suggested taking the decision to Town Meeting. Because the town voted to allocate the money for the project, he said it might make sense to have the town decide whether it wants to see the project tie into town sewer. He said connections fees for the project could fix leaks in the existing system that would free up capacity. Recent heavy rains caused more water to seep into the pipes than the wastewater treatment plant is permitted to take in, and maybe for every gallon discharged from the Cook site, three or four could be gained.

However, Sewer Commissioner Sean Cunning said by allowing the voters to decide whether to let the Cook project tie in, "you're saying we have capacity." He said if the town did vote in favor of the Cook project tying in, there are other projects ahead in the sewer line, and there would surely be more litigation.

The proposed 105-unit Cedarmere senior housing project was denied sewer access by the commission, based on the fact that the board feels there is not enough capacity. The town is under a court order to hook up certain areas of town to protect the environment, and all connections have not been completed. The board said it would like to wait until it has had a chance to monitor all the planned hook-ups for at least a year before hooking up other projects. However, Cedarmere has filed a suit against the town, stating they provided a no-impact proposal for the town, and should be granted sewer access.

The proposed 200-unit Avalon project off Rte. 3A has also spent considerable sums looking for wastewater alternatives because its developers were told sewer access was not feasible. Therefore, the project never filed a sewer application and went forward pursuing alternates in good faith. Now, it appears Avalon wants to preserve its right to sewer access and has filed a

Village powwow planned with Waterfield Group

Changes to plans are on the table

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With more contractors bidding, it can drive down the costs of the project, and more can be done for less money, and the task force would like to see plans which would potentially attract more bids.

Although it still has not been officially appointed, members of a Village Streetscape task force will set up a meeting with members of the Waterfield Design Group to discuss possibly implementing a list of changes that would appease many of the concerns still circulating around the project.

Members of the planning board have drafted a list of recommendations for the project based on meetings held throughout the past few weeks, which incorporate concerns from both their board, the Board of Selectmen, and concerned residents and merchants.

"We're not saying we're smarter than anyone else," said Planning Board member Peter Pratt, who presented the compiled recommendations, but added he thinks any project of this scope should be thoroughly reviewed on a very detailed level.

The town hired the Waterfield Design Group to design the new streetscape as part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, which has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for through grants and private donations. The discussions surrounding the design of the Village streetscape have been going on for two and a half years.

The first concern with the project is that the bid package is not effectively competitive. The task force heard only three contractors took out bids for the project, and only two had any intentions of responding. It feels the response received was "not nearly as competitive as it should be for a job of this size." With more contractors bidding, it can drive down the costs of the project, and more can be done for less money, and the task force would like to see plans which would potentially attract more bids.

However, Town Manager Mark Haddad said the bid is open until the end of the week, as they close on April 30. At that time, the town will know exactly how many bids it has received, and it is too early to speculate what that number might be. However, the group believes the plans could have been too confusing due to the proposed phasing of the project or perhaps due to the detail shown, which may have deterred potential contractors.

Selectman Rob Spofford said he completely disagreed with the plans being too detailed and said he would rather see them detailed all the way down to what kinds of screws should be used, than not detailed enough. "Contractors don't want to see detail so they can change-order us to death," he said. Spofford, who was chairman of the School Building Committee for the school projects, said when those bids went out, they were 100 percent complete, and the project was able to be completed on time and on budget as a result.

The task force was also concerned about the ramifications poured concrete sidewalks will have on village aesthetics. The task force said it would like to see either brick or "black rock pavers," which are concrete pavers slightly larger than bricks, and if either one could be laid over sand, that may enable the town to lay an infrastructure for wires that can be buried in the future when the town has the money to do so.

"This has all gone to Town Meeting," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, adding if he remembers correctly, the discussion over brick didn't focus on just the money aspect. He said he knows there has been a difference of opinion on whether residents voted against the "concept" of brick, which would imply voting against paying for brick, or whether they actually voted against incorporating brick. Either way, he said it is clear votes both at the ballot box and Town Meeting said the town does not want to bury the wires.

Members from the Waterfield Design Group said their plans have poured concrete sidewalks because that was what they were directed to do. "Brick versus concrete was a financial issue and concrete is more cost-effective," said Craig Miller of Waterfield. He said in addition, his firm designed the sidewalks on a rigid base because state standards mandate it in order to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act. He said while the town could choose to go with a flexible base such as sand, it would have to sign a waiver taking all responsibility for any accidents that may occur, as cracking due to frost heaves is more likely with a flexible base. Waterfield said it would not be held responsible for anyone tripping on the sidewalk.

Parking was also an issue, as the design of spaces as currently configured could potentially set a bad legal precedent for the town. Pratt said Planning Board member Bob Sturdy has been very concerned with the size of the proposed parking spaces and the group requested an opinion from Town Counsel on the matter.

It was also suggested that if Elm Street was taken out of the project, it may free up money to be spent elsewhere, and would also let the quirky nature of the street stay the way it is. While it may not go along with the regulations of the state, the task force believes it has worked so far for the people who live in Cohasset and it might make more sense to leave it alone.

In addition to the streetscape, the planning board has concerns regarding the James Brook Flood Control Project. Pratt said the two engineers that have been involved with the project have different concepts for the best way to mitigate flood waters and the group would like to see a third party brought in to evaluate the designs. Haddad said he would try to set up a meeting between John Modzelewski, Tutela Engineering, and Waterfield.

Members of the Waterfield Design Group said they would be happy to make changes to include bid alternates on the plans, but with every change they make and every meeting they attend, there is a cost associated. To date, the town has spent $243,000 on design costs alone, and has been reimbursed for $145,000 from grants.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Two train stations?

Town Manager Mark Haddad said at a recent meeting for the Rails with Trails project, Eric Fleming from the MBTA proposed putting in an 800 foot train station between Smith Place and Sohier Street. It would have no parking and would be used mostly by pedestrians. However, selectmen worried adding the station would change the existing plans too much and would create problems such as adding a drop-off and pick-up area as well as speeding traffic in the village. "It's awfully late in the game to be adding something like this," said Selectman Fred Koed.

However, Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said the concept does have appeal to him because it could provide access the people in town need as well as help the merchants in the downtown area.

Haddad said any changes would require a public hearing, but he would get more information on the idea and report back to the board.

"If the MBTA brought it up, maybe we should listen," said Selectman Rob Spofford.

Still searching for Veterans' names

The Veterans Memorial Committee is compiling a list of Cohasset residents who served in both the Korean and Vietnam Wars to be included on a new memorial at Veterans Park on Cohasset harbor. If you know of any names that should be included on either list, or the names of those who have served in the Public Health Service or Merchant Marine, please contact Glenn Pratt either via e-mail at gpratt@suburbancompanies.com or by mail at Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee c/o Glenn Pratt, 482 King Street, Cohasset MA 02025.

Graham Waste plans approved for Rte. 3A

Plans to raze the small Cape-style house which currently serves as the candy store "Sweet Surprises," and replace it with a new office building have been approved by the planning board. The proposed 4,400 square-foot building is slated for the 2.6-acre site located next to Cohasset Collision. The approval is contingent only on receiving adequate drain calculations.

Sticker fees will remain the same

Although raising all-facilities sticker fees was floated as a way to help with some of the problems going on at Sandy Beach, the Board of Selectmen voted against raising the sticker fee and the cost will remain at $30.

motion to intervene, or join in the Cedarmere lawsuit.

Haddad said at this point, the town is looking into all viable options, and realizes it is not the only project with sewer problems. No matter what solution the project comes to, there are two others that have been working toward the same thing and he said he realizes they all have a place in line.

"We are going to pursue whatever we need to pursue to make this project work. There are a lot of hurdles ahead of us, but we're making a concerted effort to overcome them," he said.

Haddad said in the event the Northland developers pull out of the project, the town can either go out to bid again or decide to stop the project completely. He said the town would get back the $200,000 which is currently in escrow that was supposed to be given back at the passing, but the town would be out roughly $75,000 in various engineering and design costs. "It's a possibility, but I hope that doesn't happen," he said.

We'll make you smile.

Border Street boatyard to get badly needed facelift

Type of tenant is still unknown

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

What will ultimately happen at the dilapidated Mill River Marine boatyard site — known as Cohasset's "motif #1" — is still anybody's guess as developers are mum on their plans.

But one thing is for sure, any businesses on the parcel off Border Street must have a waterfront use, which drastically limits the kinds of businesses that can operate on site, because the town's zoning bylaw prohibits a change of use in the waterfront business district.

The planning board heard revised plans to tear down and rebuild three dilapidated structures at the boatyard last Wednesday, and one of the board's newest members could not contain his curiosity. Planning Board member Stuart Ivimey asked the developers to be more specific about their plans for what would occupy the site.

"I have no comment on that," said Charles Humphreys, attorney for Donald Staszko, who is currently in the process of working out a deal to purchase the Mill River Boatyard from Peter Roy of Margin Street. Humphreys added whatever business does end up in their buildings will comply with the town's bylaws and said "no one quite knows," what the final plans will be. Staszko owns Cohasset Plaza and the former car dealership site on Route 3A near the Scituate line. Roy owns Atlantica, the Old Salt House and the Cohasset Harbor Inn.

But Ivimey, who was elected April 3, didn't give up and questioned the development team's motives. "If the applicant doesn't want to tell us what they want to do, it raises questions and makes me wonder if we have a snake in the grass," he said.

"That's unfair," said Humphreys, adding Ivimey shouldn't ask unnecessary questions at this stage, as future uses for the buildings do not need to be disclosed during the site plan review.

However, Ivimey went on to say it doesn't make sense to him that an applicant would hire engineers to draft plans, as well as a project manager and attorneys for the project, and not have any idea what was going to be done with the site once construction was complete.

An agitated Humphreys asked that Ivimey recuse himself from any further discussion due to what he described as unfair comments and bias against the project.

But Planning Board Chairman Alfred Moore explained while he understood Ivimey's concerns it is not in the board's purview to ask. While Moore said it would be nice for the applicants to share the information, they are under no obligation to divulge what businesses may or may not be included in the future as part of the site-plan review.

However, Planning Board member Peter Pratt said he feels the board does have the duty to ask what businesses might begin operating on site after renovations and that it would be doing a disservice to the community if it let the project move forward without exploring all the possibilities. In an interview after the meeting, he said while any business must comply with both the town's bylaws and the state's guidelines for waterfront businesses, it only makes sense for the developers to let the board know what they have in mind, so it is able to determine whether it will be harmonious with its neighbors. In addition, any change that causes an increase of traffic to the site will require the need for more parking, and Pratt said the commercial fisherman already say they have parking problems.

Building Inspector Robert Egan said the business limitations are clear for the site and "very little" can be allowed, even with a special permit, which does raise the question of what will occupy the site. He said marine related sales such as paint and petroleum products would be the best choice for a business, but, like Pratt, he too said parking will be a problem.

"There is no place in town other than the downtown area," where street parking can be counted toward the parking for your business," Egan said.

During the meeting, Pratt said he wanted to clear up any doubt about the future of the Cohasset Lobster Pound, which has operated on the site for many years and asked if the local business will be included in the plans going forward.

"Not presently, no," replied Humphreys.

Pratt said he thought he was told at a previous meeting that the Lobster Pound would remain, although he did not have the approved minutes from that meeting in front of him, and could not be 100 percent sure. Humphreys said he was almost positive no one had said the Lobster Pound would remain at any previous meeting because it has not been a part of the plans to keep it there. While Humphreys did not rule out a lobster pound at the site, it would not be the existing business.

One of the buildings housed apartments in the past. However, the Planning Board and developers agreed apartments would not be allowed and could not be grandfathered as they have not been inhabited for more than 10 years.

"The real purpose of this project is to get these buildings up. Once they're up, a lot more becomes viable," said Humphreys.

Carlos Peña, vice president of CLE Engineering, the engineers for the developer, provided information on building height and area to provide a comparison between what is currently standing and what is planned for the future site. "Everything is essentially being lifted two and a half feet to accommodate for the 100-year flood plain," he said. Peña added there are currently water marks from where high tides have flooded the buildings before.

George Morgan, Project Manager for Mill River Boatyard LLC — the new owners — said while original plans drafted included more changes, the new plans rebuild the existing structures and do not increase their size.

"So you're saying there is virtually going to be no change from what is there currently?" asked Planning Board Chairman Al Moore.

"That is correct," said Morgan.

Pratt said there had been some questions as to whether the new construction would impact the view of nearby homes. Humphreys said as far as he knows, the house across the street is a low slung ranch, and a difference of two feet won't make any difference as far as a view is concerned. "I would hope they would consider it an improvement of their view anyway," Humphreys said.

The development team for the Mill River Boatyard is slated to come before the Planning Board again Wednesday, May 5.

Mill River Boatyard buildings on last legs

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

There aren't many Cohasset residents who have seen the inside of the neglected "Eastwick" and other main buildings at the Mill River Marine Boatyard off Border Street in many years. But at least a handful have now, thanks to a walk-through of the waterfront parcel conducted by the development team that wants to bring the site back to life.

With waivers signed, the developers – hired by Mill River Boatyard LLC, the new company that wants to buy the site – began the tour in the "Eastwick" building, renamed after its role in the 1987 film "The Witches of Eastwick." Of all the buildings, it is located closest to the Border Street bridge.

Currently, the Eastwick building houses one boat on its open first floor. The ceilings are high, which makes it a perfect sheltered area to work on boats. However, while the back of the building is fairly secure, the front of the building is resting on wooden posts and is ready to collapse into the water below. Those who do work in the building know better than to venture too far.

Wooden stairs lead to a loft space which is also one big, open room. There are rafters which make up what is referred to as a "collar tie" area, with beams connecting from one side of the roofline to the other about 2 feet apart. The beams are open to the ceiling, and therefore the storage area does not count as another floor of the building, but provides additional storage space off the floor for flat items such as boat sails.

The main building on the site has three floors. The ground floor is currently being used as a workshop for boat repairs. There is a small incompatible with the fishing industry. "You will see a loss of the fleet," he said.

The Mill River Boatyard is currently owned by Peter Roy of Margin Street, who also owns Atlantica, the Old Salt House and the Cohasset Harbor Inn. Donald Staszko is currently in the process of working out a deal to purchase the Mill River Boatyard from Roy. Staszko owns Cohasset Plaza and the former car dealership site on Route 3A near the Scituate line.

Developers for the Mill River project say they would like to tear down the three dilapidated buildings on the site, and rebuild them essentially as they stand today, but will not specify what they will be used for.

"It is astonishing people are dancing around what will be done," on the site, said Michaud, adding the only way the town can be completely sure it will retain its fishing fleet is to purchase the property itself.

Currently, the Cohasset Lobster Pound, run by Tommy Alioto, provides what he says is a very beneficial service to fisherman in the harbor. Alioto said of the 32 boats in Cohasset's fleet, he regularly buys lobsters from 31, and his current location makes it convenient for all involved. He has been told he must leave the premises by Sept. 1, and is looking into moving his business to Hull, which will mean the fishermen he has been working with for 13 years will either have to transport their lobsters to him, or find some place else to go. He added that lobsters are only of value if they are alive, and traveling with them for extended periods of time doesn't help.

While he said his business will survive the move, Alioto will miss working with the fishermen he has come to know over the years, should they decide to sell lobsters elsewhere, and he expects they will miss the convenience his business allows. He said he has built up a trust with his clients that if he knows a boat will be coming back into the harbor after hours, he will make a key available to them so they can bring their lobsters in and weigh them, all on an honors system.

From a financial standpoint, planning board member Peter Pratt said if the fishing industry is lost, it will make it impossible for the town to be able to receive federal funds for marine projects, such as the dredging of the harbor. The town received $1 million for the dredging project, and would not have received it, had the town not had a commercial fishing industry. Should the lobster pound be lost, Pratt fears "The oldest continuing profession in town," will suffer, as well as marine-related projects in the future.

But aside from the financial implications losing the fleet will have for both the town and the families of those who make a living on the ocean, Michaud said the town will lose much of the character it has held on to for generations.

"There is an intrinsic value to the fishing industry," said Michaud, adding when the boats come in they aren't just bringing a product, they are keeping the history of the town alive. The fishing industry "is very important to all the people who depend on it, and it is part of your heritage, and you will lose it if you lose your infrastructure," Michaud said.

The development team for the Mill River Boatyard is slated to come before the planning board again Wednesday, May 5.

'Bitter Man' comedy club opens at Red Lion Inn son or another. This time, it was."

Not that he hasn't had his share of headaches getting the idea off the drawing board.

"It's been interesting" Norris laughed. "After we decided to do this, Gerry went on vacation for a month and forgot to tell anyone at the Inn what was going on. No one had any idea that this was really happening." He credits the support of Jimmy Dean, the Inn's Managing Partner and its new Events Planner Carol Lavelle for being "a real trouper" throughout the process of making the club a reality.

And Norris, working the connections he has maintained in the Boston comedy scene, has managed to pull together a season of headliners worthy of any Boston stage, acts that will include a mix of both veteran and up-and-coming comic talent.

Future shows will feature comedians of both local and national reputation. Some of the headliners sprinkled throughout the spring and summer include Peter Dutton, Patty Ross, Paul Nardizzi, Kevin Knox, Chance Langdon and Friday night's headliner, actor/comedian Frank Santorelli, best known for his role as "Georgie", the long-suffering bartender at "The Bing" on the HBO series, "The Sopranos".

Norris, who makes it a point to say that he has no plans to take to the stage as a stand-up artist at the Bitter Man ("I leave the stand-up to the pros.") notes that he'd like to give newer comics a place to hone their craft as well. He stresses however that any future plans will depend on how the club is received.

That said, "Everyone I have talked to is very excited" about a comedy club opening on the South Shore, adding, "My goal is to start out small and see where we go from there." If all goes well, he plans to expand from his current one night a week schedule, adding additional shows as well as a rotating schedule of Improv and "Open Mic" Nights for South Shore residents who want to give stand-up a whirl. He also (half) jokingly mentions that he is considering splitting the night of comedy into an early and late show format so that "old people like me can have an early dinner, catch a show and be home and in bed by 10 o'clock."

For now he is keeping the schedule to one performance at 8:30 p.m.., making the Inn a destination where couples can "have dinner and take in a show" all in one place, adding that unlike in Boston, "finding parking will be a breeze."

Norris insists that he doesn't want to be looked at as a "Producer" or The Bitter Man a "Business", hinting that either designation would take all the fun out of it for him.

"I really do think it has come together because I don't look at it as a business. As long as we keep it professional but fun, I think we'll do okay," adding he made a conscious decision to hold the show's cover at $10 "so that people have some change left over for cocktails during the show."

And when asked to sum up why he chose to open the club, Norris offered a somewhat wistful, and very un-businesslike, answer:

"I miss stand-up and I miss seeing comedy. If I sat around waiting for someone else to do it, it would never get done. So here we are."

If last week's enthusiastically received opener is any indication, Lance Norris can look forward to seeing lots of great comedy, right in his hometown, for years to come.

PERFORMATHON

Cohasset's Sophie Arnold was one of more than 225 students who performed at South Shore Conservatory's annual Performathon at Borders Books in Braintree. The annual fundraiser is an all-day marathon of hourly recitals and draws audience members from all over the South Shore. In addition to the performance space, Borders donated a percentage of their weekend sales to the Conservatory.

RELAY TEAM CAPTAINS, MEMBERS

The Relay For Life in Cohasset planning committee is currently seeking local residents to serve as team captains and/or team members. Relay For Life teams raise money by gathering sponsors to support their participation in the Relay. Teams of walkers keep a continuous presence on a local school track throughout the overnight event, walking in shifts to raise funds for American Cancer Society programs of research, education, advocacy and local patients. The second Team Captain's meeting is set for Wednesday, May 19 from 6:30 - 7:30p.m. at the Cohasset High School Cafeteria.. Anyone interested in finding out more about Relay For Life and how to join is welcome to attend. The Relay For Life is set for: June 18-19at Cohasset High School For more information about Relay For Life in Cohasset or to find out how to volunteer, please contact Justine Vanderlugt at 781-383-2956.

SEASIDE ADVENTURES

Seaside Adventures at the Center for Student Coastal Research on Parker Avenue returns this year, providing students who just recently completed third grade through sixth grade, the opportunity to explore the shoreline of Cohasset. The camp will be broken up into three, two-week sessions starting July 6 and running through August 12. Each session campers are given all the necessary tools and information to re-create the harbor's or surrounding shoreline's ecosystem in their own fish tank. The design and what goes in the tank is entirely up to them based on their hands on fun-filled experiences. Come join us for what we believe will be another successful and exciting summer experience! For more information visit: www.ccscr.org , by e-mail at seasideadventures@ccsr.org or call 383-0129.

XAVERIAN HONORS

The third marking period of the 2003-2004 school year is over at Xaverian Brothers High School and Cohasset resident, junior Mark Lewis, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Kevin F. Lewis, earned second honors. Great work Mark.

CAR WASH SATURDAY

Well, George Roukanoukas has done it again and again! George shared his Olympic Citco station, downtown, with Cohasset High School baseball players, allowing them to wash cars to raise money to pay for a coach and a batting cage. If you missed the first car wash, the team will be at George's starting at 9 a.m. on Saturday, May 1 to wash and dry your car for a donation. And if you see George, thank him for keeping Cohasset cars running and looking good!

POST PROM MEETING, INFORMATION

The next Post Prom All Committee Meeting date will be held on May 4 at 7:30 in the CHS cafeteria. New volunteers are welcome to attend. Clean Up Committee especially needs volunteers. Please contact David McMorris, Chair, for further information or to sign up. The Post Prom Committee would like to remind CHS Senior parents of the following: Please deliver to Coldwell Banker at 11 North Main St. by May 1, a photo poster of your senior that encompasses your child's life. The poster board should be approximately 20 in. x 27 in., which is standard-sized. Please mail photographs of your senior and his/her classmates and friends by May 1 to Senior Photos, PO Box 542 or deliver them to either Jody Doyle or Elinor Barrett. All photos will be returned if they are labeled or if they are one of a kind, please make a copy of them for submission.

Hey all of you yoga fans. Holly Pereira is holding a yoga class from 7:15-8:30 p.m. Wednesday nights at The Second Congregational Church. The cost is $6 and beginners are welcome. Please call Holly for more info at 857-498-0178.

SPRING INTO WELLNESS

Renew Yourself with Natural Wellness Technologies" is the theme of an exciting presentation to be held at the Cohasset Public Library on Tuesday, May 18 (7-8 p.m.) and Thursday, May 20 (1-2 p.m.). If you have low energy, trouble sleeping, tired, achy feet or legs, sore joints, or just want to have renewed energy and feel great, then this educational workshop is for you! Come hear Nutritionist and Wellness Consultant Patricia Messing-Hague of Cohasset discuss cutting-edge, innovative and unique ways to help your body heal itself and stay WELL, vigorous and energetic! Simple things like drinking pure "living" water, taking proper nutrition supplements, addressing discomfort with natural non-toxic, non-invasive technologies...and much more! Special guest speaker Carole Siegal of Cohasset will tell the story of her health renewal. This program is free and open to everyone. If you have questions, please call 781-383-2410.

HOUSE FEATURED ON TV

Anyone interested in getting a look inside the home at 3 Jerusalem Lane should tune into Channel 5 at noon Saturday (May 1) when the 6,000-square-foot house is being featured on a program called "This Amazing House." The house is currently on the market for just under $4 million!

50TH REUNION PLANNED

Early planning is under way for a reunion bringing together the members of the 1954 graduating class of Cohasset High School. As well, a search is under way for those who were members of that class but were separated prior to graduation and would like to join in on the festivities. Knowing that most of those who were associated with this class have left Cohasset, it is hoped that friends who still live in town will inform them, as soon as is possible of the plans for the event.

Individuals who have not already been informed of the event and want to be included in on all plans should contact Norman Jason, P.O. Box 46, Durham, CT 06422 or call 860-349-3438. Much work is still to be done but it is necessary to know who is going to be in attendance before plans can be completed.

a Silver Award. For that, Kristen ran her own Daisy troop of four girls who wanted to be Girl Scouts, but didn't have enough members in their age group to have a full troop.

Some of the other patches Kristen has earned along the way are the "cookies and dough" patch, which she earned after working for the Girl Scouts council, running its cookie web site; a patch for soccer; a patch for rock climbing; and a patch for visiting the State House.

Kristen said she will attend Fitchburg State College in the fall, and hopes to pursue a career in computer science. She said after college, she will continue in her role as a Girl Scout, as she plans to become a troop leader.

PSO Phone-a-thon on TV May 12

Each year PSO volunteers make more than 750 phone calls as part of the annual phone contribution drive. This year, it is with much excitement that the PSO hosts its first ever Cohasset PSO tele-a-thon to be held live on local Comcast Channel 10 on Wednesday, May 12, from 7 to 8:30 p.m.

The Cohasset PSO Tele-a-thon is similar to the WGBH annual pledge drive except that instead of items for auction, they will be raffling off many items at different pledge levels. Names will be entered into a raffle drawing based upon the level of the pledge, and winners will be drawn on TV at the end of the evening (8:30 to 9 p.m.). Some of the items included in the raffle are tickets to the New England Patriots, dinner at Atlantica, and a Cohasset Sailing Club membership.

Throughout the tele-a-thon program, there will be a talent show consisting of children from all of the Cohasset Public Schools. Any interested musician or ensemble should contact Nancy Froio at 781-383-1897 by May 1. Tele-a-thon emcees will be sure to make this night a night to remember.

Biodiversity Days in Appleton Field

The First Herring Brook Watershed Initiative is planning several fun events to celebrate Scituate's Biodiversity Days starting with a visit to the Appleton Field near the South Swamp on Saturday, May 15 from 9:30 a.m. - 12 noon.

The Appleton Field is one of the few remaining large, inland, natural open field habitats, still surrounded by undeveloped land, left in Scituate. It is a scenic area full of bird life as well as many species of dragonflies and wild flowers, and it was recently purchased by the Town of Scituate with Community Preservation Act Funds. .

Bring your binoculars and cameras as local naturalists will be on hand with identification manuals and supplies to help identify and document findings. .

Meet at the Mount Hope Improvement Society Building at the corner of Clapp Road and Cedar Street in Scituate's West End at 9:30 a.m. Suggested donation is $3 and long pants are recommended..

Mill River Boatyard buildings on last legs

doorway which opens to a staircase that leads upstairs. On the second floor, there is a storage area and what remains of an apartment which hasn't been rented out since roughly 1987.

"Structurally, this building may be in worse shape than the Eastwick building," said Project Manager George Morgan. There are places in the ceiling through which there is a view to the room above, and water damage has made portions of the floor less than sturdy.

The third floor also used to serve as an apartment, and remnants of wallpaper still remain in the kitchen. However, there is now a hole in the roof and extensive water damage to the floors, although the same beautiful view remains outside its windows.

The Quonset Hut is said to have collapsed last winter, and is essentially a pile of rubble. The deck between the Eastwick building and main building is also in bad shape and some of its boards are rotten. The Lobster Pound is structurally sound, although it is in need of sprucing up.

Plans for the site include rebuilding the three dilapidated buildings and moving the Quonset Hut a little closer to the Lobster Pound building. The deck will be rebuilt as well.

Members of the Mill River Boatyard development team will come before the Planning Board again Wednesday, May 5.

Bradley unopposed in November election

Logan decides against a run

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

For state Rep. Garrett Bradley the November election will be a first. The 33-year-old Hingham Democrat, who will be seeking his third term, has no opposition this time around.

Polly Logan, 78, of Cohasset, who pulled nomination papers and collected signatures, has decided not to run against Bradley after all.

The deadline to file nomination papers with local registrars of voters was 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Logan, who said she spent $35,000 of her own money in the recent three-way race for Republican State Committeewoman in the Plymouth-Norfolk District, said the representative race would be too expensive, according to published reports.

Logan could not be reached for comment.

Bradley, who represents the Third Plymouth District that includes Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and one precinct in Scituate, has raised upwards of $100,000 for his campaigns. Bradley, who is also known as a tireless campaigner walking the district and knocking on every door, faced a three-way challenge in the Democratic primary back in 1998. He then lost to long-time incumbent Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, a Cohasset Republican, in the general election

Bradley was back again in 2000 and won a tough Democratic primary against fellow Democrat Michael Holden of Hingham and then beat Republican Mary Anne McKenna and independent Walter Murray of Hull for Rep. Murray's seat.

In 2002, Bradley, who was unopposed in the primary, beat Republican Nathaniel Palmer of Cohasset in the general election.

Bradley said being unopposed is a reflection that the voters are satisfied with the job he's been doing for the past 3-1/2 years. "I'm happy to be able to focus on the job and not the politics of it," he said.

But Bradley said Logan would have been a formidable opponent.

"She has worked hard on many campaigns and done a lot to raise the profile of the South Shore on the state level," he said.

Barring a write-in campaign for the September Democratic Primary, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, will also be unopposed in November.

Hedlund, who was also unopposed in 1998, was challenged by Democrats Jim Cantwell in 2000 and Ted LeClair in 2002.

Hedlund, who represents the eight-town Plymouth-Norfolk District, said being unopposed is a reflection of the job he is doing and also the power of incumbency. There hasn't been an incumbent state senator defeated since 1994 when Hedlund beat Democrat Brian McDonald of Weymouth.

"There is a tremendous advantage that comes with incumbency although less so for a Republican," Hedlund said, adding he has hopefully offset any vulnerability he may have as a Republican through a lot of hard work.

Disabled veterans meet at Glastonbury

The Lt. Ralph Talbot Disabled American Veterans Chapter 65 is sponsoring an information-sharing meeting to be held on Saturday, May 1, beginning at 9:30 a.m. and not lasting more than about one hour at the new Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center.

The DAV hopes that the meeting will result in added memberships and more active participation in the local Chapter.

Chapter 65 "Serves Those Who Served" in the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth. They perpetuate the memory of fallen comrades, assist members and their families who are in need and keep the membership advised of their benefit entitlements. Of particular note is the role the National Service Officers play in providing free representation for those who need help in presenting disability claims to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

DAV membership eligibility is open to anyone wounded, injured, or disabled during honorable service or while engaged in extra-hazardous service under conditions simulating war.

The DAV hopes that the meeting will result in added memberships and more active participation in the local Chapter so that they can continue to help those who have suffered from the horrific wounds of war. A National Service Officer from the JFK Federal Building, as well as veterans' agents from the six towns have been invited.

The Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center is on the left-hand side of Rte 228, about ¼ mile beyond the intersection of Rtes 228 and 3A. As you near the Abbey, the road splits and you should bear left toward Hull(not Cohasset), take the first left after the main driveway. The Conference Center is handicapped accessible with parking.

Sewer forum called for

In our years of covering Cohasset, the town's sewer and wastewater problems take the cake when it comes to complicated issues. In fact writing about Prop. 2-1/2, Chapter 40 B, or Greenbush are relatively easy in comparison.

Suffice it to say, wastewater woes in town date back more than a generation. Cohasset — which is under a court order to fix the pollution problems from leaky septic systems — has made strides. The sewer plant has been expanded with hundreds of homes added to the system and Cohasset inked an inter-municipal agreement with Hull to hook up the homes in North Cohasset to that town's wastewater treatment plant.

We're unclear about how much capacity the existing plant can handle and how much more would be available if leaks in the system were repaired.

With the Little Harbor area patiently waiting in the wings, the proposed new multi-unit developments, including the 105-unit Cedarmere project; the 85-plus unit Cook Estate and 200-unit Avalon project are also all eyeing potential sewer hookups.

We're unclear about how much capacity the existing plant can handle and how much more would be available if leaks in the system were repaired. Also because the senior housing for the Cook Estate has the backing of Town Meeting could that project jump ahead of the line? The town is facing a legal challenge from the Cedarmere developers whose engineers say the plant has enough capacity and with certain fixes could accommodate a lot more flow. Avalon, at considerable expense, researched alternative wastewater disposal solutions when it was told a sewer connection was not possible. Does Avalon have first dibs if it is found the plant does have sufficient capacity?

We think it's time for the sewer commission, board of health, planning board, water commission and board of selectmen to conduct a forum that would focus on the town's wastewater and sewer issues, including what the town has to due under the court order. Also the roles of the various boards need to be clarified. For example, residents may need to understand the role of the planning board which approved Cedarmere, whose plans are designed around a sewer connection it may not be able to obtain.

Sewer issues have been discussed before but in various meetings before various committees. We think an open forum dedicated to the issue with charts and maps and a lot straight talk would go along way to clearing up any confusion.

For years the lack of an adequate sewer system stalled development. We need to know if that could still be the case and getting the related town boards in the same room at the same time might help clear this matter up.

Yard sale benefits scholarship fund

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee will hold its annual yard sale to benefit the Joseph F. Walsh III Memorial Scholarship Fund on Saturday, May 1, from 8 a.m. to noon at 89 Doane St., (off of Beechwood Street). The theme this year is "Something for Everyone" and shoppers will find a treasure trove of household items, china, glassware, collectibles, linens, books, toys, sports equipment and much more. Committee Chair, Agnes McCann, predicts a large turn-out, "This is our only annual fundraising event and we are so fortunate to have such a large amount of community support. With the diversity of items we have for sale, we hope to exceed last year's great success. We have lots of fun and, because every dollar goes to such a worthy cause, it's guilt free shopping! We invite everyone to join us."

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee has awarded the Joseph F. Walsh III Memorial Scholarship to graduating Cohasset seniors since 1978.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Misguided contributors

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm glad I am not chairman of the Cohasset School Committee...as I was for 11 years back in the 50s and 60s...because I wouldn't want to face the hard choice of whether to accept the prospective contribution of funds to replace three elementary teachers now eliminated from the budget.

My inclination would be to politely turn it down...for three compelling reasons:

The decision-making system is more important than the specific case. I believe the School Committee, guided by the Superintendent, should make the decisions about school operations, not an unelected group of citizens, however well intentioned (including many good friends of mine). The current school management has decided that the elimination of the three teachers, while undesirable, is acceptable. If this decision is unacceptable to some citizens, the solution is to try to change the committee.

Such a voluntary, one-time contribution, is no guarantee of a permanent commitment and will only complicate and postpone a final decision. The current chairman, while apparently willing to accept the funds, has expressed this concern.

The effect of the relatively small increase in class sizes, while probably undesirable, is open to question. Ideally a one-to-one ratio is perfection, and 50-1 impossible, but the difference of 3 or 4 in a class is probably less important than the quality of the teacher.

Again, I don't envy the committee members. If they accept, they are undermining their own decision-making authority and buying trouble for the future. If they turn it down, they will offend their most concerned constituents. Perhaps they can dissuade the misguided contributors.

Help sought to fund 3 teaching positions

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to express our gratitude to the many families who have generously contributed approximately $25,000 toward the goal of funding three teacher positions currently slated to be cut in the coming school year. These families understand that the projected class sizes of up to 26 students are unacceptable and so have lent their voices to the growing chorus of support for this important cause.

Our mission is to raise $105,000 to fund the three teacher positions fully, thereby maintaining the class sizes we currently enjoy.

Special thanks go to Superintendent Ted Malvey and Town Manager Mark Haddad for their encouragement. In addition, we are grateful to the School Committee for their consensus and public declaration that this project has merit and may indeed go forward.

We still need $80,000 to accomplish our goal. While we are seeking $105 from 1,000 families in town, many people have chosen to contribute in significantly higher amounts. Everyone's help is needed to achieve our objective. Please send your tax-deductible contribution (made payable to the Cohasset Education Foundation) to Barbara Buckley, 272 North Main St., Cohasset.

Happy with decision on front-gate guard

TO THE EDITOR:

Mrs. Vanderlugt sent the following letter to the selectmen and town manager:

On behalf of the mothers on Sandy Beach, we would like to thank you for making the decision to put an attendant at the front gate. It's nice to know that our children will be in a safer environment this summer.

Regarding beach items and activities, we are looking forward to working with the Beach Association to help raise money and to come up with different ideas so that all ages can enjoy Sandy Beach.

Justine Vanderlugt
344 King St.

Changing roles in government

TO THE EDITOR:

Both Lou Harvey and Murray Campbell have written interesting letters about town government.

In the last few years, the functions of the Selectmen and School Committee have changed.

The Selectmen by vote of Town Meeting hired a Town Manager. They relinquished their hiring function to the manager. He is more "on top of" the actual day today operation of the town. The manager also prepares the budget for their approval, superceding the Advisory committee. The selectman still appoint committees, set policy, hearings on town problems, and bound reports. Thus it would be foolhardy to move the Sewer and Water boards as appointed since they function well as an election board.

The school committee under the education reform act, does not hire its personnel anymore (except Superintendent). This policy and curriculum are an important part of their function. Of course, the budget is a large part of their job.

As the responsibilities of both committees are diminished, it becomes more important that careful line item budgeting be reinstated. Part of the discontent with the electorate will be eliminated if a solid line item budget presentation is available in the warrant.

I commend all those who chose to run for office this past election and wish the victors a productive three years on the boards.

School board backs fundraising effort

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to make a clarification to a story in last week's Mariner regarding Mrs. Buckley's fundraising effort to restore elementary school teachers who were cut from next year's school budget. In the story it was stated that the School Committee was not supporting this endeavor. Clearly we do support this effort. There was some confusion, most likely caused by me, in emphasizing that this is a private fundraising effort that the School Committee is not involved with. We applaud this attempt to maintain smaller class sizes and welcome any reasonable attempts at this. I apologize for any confusion that was created.

I would also like to thank all those who contributed to a successful override. I believe it was a win for the entire town and helps to slow the erosion of town services. Thank you for your support.

HEALTH NOTES

Those bumps we acquire as time goes by

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Common varieties are nodules cysts, polyps and warts.

Last week Health Notes did not appear because of computer difficulties which, since much of the content of this column comes from the internet, left me severely resource challenged. Such an event puts into focus our dependency on that device. This week, the subject is bumps. As one ages, various bumps lumps and anomalies begin to appear on ones body. It's my experience that our bodies were a lot more fun when we were younger. Most of these gratuitous appendages are harmless. The late Dr. Wayne DeWaald used to advise those who had a protruding growth of unwanted skin to tie a piece of thread around it; pull it tight, and in a few days the growth, starved for blood supply, would drop off. But bumps vary. Common varieties are nodules cysts, polyps and warts:

• Nodules are solid, raised bumps on the skin, greater than 10 millimeters in diameter.

• A cyst is a closed pocket or pouch of tissue. It can be filled with air, fluid, pus, or other material. Cysts are common on the skin and develop as a result of infection, clogging of glands, or around foreign bodies.

• Polyp is an abnormal growth of tissue, which may be malignant or benign.

• Warts are small, usually painless growths on the skin caused by a virus. They are generally harmless. However, warts can be disfiguring and embarrassing, and occasionally they itch or hurt (particularly on the feet).

As the human race has evolved over the millennia, we have improved, upgraded in computer parlance. And as we are exposed to changes in life styles or living condition s our bodies have adapted, sometimes imperfectly, and in many cases selectively. Accordingly, the various bumps can mean different things for women and men.

Some bumps tend to be occupation specific such as vocal nodules for singers. Others can be gender specific such as cervical cysts and polyps.

These appendages can occur internally or can appear on the skin. For the most part, they are harmless, and, indeed some are considered beauty marks. But most require expert examination to indicate whether or not they are harmful. If you're not certain, it's best to see a health care specialist.

We have learned very recently, that periodic checks, even superficial ones, can lead to substantial increases in life expectancy. But, more important, periodic upgrading, replacement of worn components, improvements in operating systems and software will permit us to participate in a long and useful existence without dysfunction, viruses or other impairments.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Sweet pea soup, a springtime treat

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Sweet peas are a symbol of spring and a good sweet pea soup ought to taste like it too: fresh, brightly flavored, and not heavy with milk or cream. Most recipes for pea soup are based on chicken stock, although older versions use nothing more than water and milk. Some additional spring green is often added, including lettuce, watercress, or pea shoots, and, oddly enough, a recipe from Chez Panisse calls for hazelnuts. I wanted it fresh, simple, and the perfect tonic to a long, hard winter.

The first question was the peas: fresh or frozen? I made the soup using fresh peas and it took me about 30 minutes to shell them. Happily the frozen peas make soup that is every bit as good as the fresh. Comparing the two, I thought the fresh peas had a slightly starchy taste as compared to the frozen, and actually had a slight preference for the frozen. I decided to stick with the four cups and base the rest of the ingredients on this amount.

The next item was watercress, an ingredient that I found key in my testing. I discovered by using 2 cups lightly packed, the pea flavor was not overwhelmed but the soup had more depth of flavor. As for oil versus butter, I preferred the latter since peas and butter are a delicious pairing. However, I left out the flour, a common ingredient in these recipes, since I did not want to thicken the liquid or dull the flavor of the soup. Shallots were more interesting than onion, although the latter makes a good substitute. For the liquid, chicken stock was my first choice and I found that any additional cream or milk was unwelcome in such a simple, clean soup. (A dollop of sour cream of full-fat plain yogurt, however, adds a bit of tang to the finished soup.) Thyme (one teaspoon) and mint (two tablespoons) were the herbs of choice.

As for cooking method, I simply simmered the peas and watercress in the broth (as opposed to cooking them separately). I tested pureeing everything versus leaving some of the peas whole, and preferred the former for this particular soup. (For super-silky soup, the hulls can be strained out.) Now the soup had big fresh pea flavor, bright green color and was a sure sign of spring.

SWEET PEA SOUP

This soup may also be made with fresh peas. You will need about 3-1/2 pounds of pods to yield the four cups needed for this recipe. You may prepare the soup up to several hours ahead of time and reheat it just before serving.

2 tablespoons butter
1/4 cup chopped shallots, about 2 large
2 cups watercress, lightly packed
2 tablespoons coarsely chopped mint leaves
1 teaspoon fresh thyme leaves
3-1/2 cups low-sodium chicken broth
4 cups frozen peas
1/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
Sour cream or full-fat yogurt (Greek style preferred) as a garnish, optional

1. In a 4-quart Dutch oven or large saucepan, melt the butter over medium heat. When foam subsides, add shallots and cook until soft and translucent, about 3 minutes. Add the watercress, mint, thyme, chicken broth, peas and salt and bring to a boil over high heat. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer and cook for 5 minutes.

2. Process the soup in batches in either a food processor or blender. For exceptionally silky soup, strain it using a mesh colander. Season to taste with salt and freshly ground pepper and serve immediately with or without the optional sour cream or yogurt garnish.

LIBRARY CORNER

Young adult room

The Young Adult room will be closed on Tuesday, May 11, and Thursday May 13, to accommodate the Cohasset Flower Show.

Books for sale

Check the book sale shelves in the Community Room for children's books and videos. Proceeds from the sale of books and videos goes to the Friends of the Library. The Friends generously fund the Summer Reading program, including the weekly small incentives, the weekly performers, and the tee shirts for all students that successfully complete their summer reading goal.

Author event

Reserve the date. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library and Buttonwood Books & Toys will host Daggers & Desserts, an evening of mystery and delicious desserts, on Thursday, May 6, at 7 p.m. at the library.

Featured authors will be Linda Barnes "Deep Pockets: A Carlotta Carlyle Mystery", David Daniel, "Goofy Foot: An Alex Rasmussen Mystery" and Katherine Hall Page, discussing "The Body in the Attic: A Faith Fairchild Mystery".

All three authors feature local areas as the setting for their novels. "Deep Pockets" takes place at Harvard, "Goofy Foot" is situated in Standish, a fictional town between Boston and Plymouth and "The Body in the Attic" is located in Cambridge. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. For information call 781 383-1348.

Spring into wellness

"Renew Yourself With Natural Wellness Technologies," is the theme of a presentation to be held at the library On Tuesday, May 18, at 7 p.m. and on Thursday May 20, at 1 p.m. If you have low energy, trouble sleeping, tired achy feet or legs, sore joints, or just want to have renewed energy and feel great, then this educational workshop is for you. Cohasset Nutritionist and Wellness consultant, Patricia Messing-Hague, will discuss innovative and unique ways to help the body heal itself and stay well, vigorous and energetic. Special guest speaker Carole Siegal of Cohasset will tell the story of her health renewal. This program is free and open to everyone. If you have questions, call Patricia Messing-Hague at 781 383-2410.

Artist exhibit

Stephanie Roberts' exhibit "Patterns and Pinhole" will be on display at the library through April 30.

Book Sale

Check out our sale bookcase of used books, videos and books on tape located in the library's Community Room. Prices are reasonable (hardcover books, videos and books on tape, $1 and paperbacks, $0.25). All proceeds go to the Friends of the Cohasset Library.

What'll we do without caviar?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Oh, there's bad news tonight for the idle rich.

The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service has listed the beluga sturgeon, a fish found mostly in the Caspian Sea off Russia and Iran, as a "threatened" species under the Endangered Species Act.

This means it is possible for the American government, several thousand miles away, to slap a suspension on the importation of the beluga and, more importantly, its eggs.

And that, as any party-throwing millionairess can tell you, means an eventual end to an expensive delicacy known as caviar, which is so costly it is sometimes accompanied by an armed guard when it appears on the hors d'oeuvres table at the Ritz.

I can see it now; a freighter anchored just outside the three-mile limit, transferring cases of contraband fish eggs to fast speed boats, and capos from La Cosa Nostra fashioning ersatz caviar from salmon eggs for local speakeasies.

Needless to say, I've never had much luck with caviar. I tried it once at a cocktail party but I didn't like it. It came, as I recall, on little squares of toast along with a thin slice of cucumber. I don't like cucumbers, either, which may have had something to do with it.

A friend of mine, whose self-proclaimed destiny in life was to become rich, used to go out of his way to look for it at cocktail parties, even though he told me he didn't like the stuff either.

"Why do you eat it?" I asked.

"I have to get used to it," he said, "because when I am rich I'll have to eat a lot of it."

When I last saw him, he was still practicing on caviar (still the free kind) and if he's gotten rich in the last 40 years I don't know about it and I check the list of Republican contributors daily for his name.

For some reason the rich go whoopee over truffles, too.

Actually, truffles are fungi that grow underground in France and Italy.

The best are those that come from the Perigord region of France where they are rooted out by pigs and kept under lock and key once they surface.

I've never eaten a truffle, mostly because I was told as a youngster that people died from eating toadstools that they had mistaken for mushrooms, another fungus.

But I digress . . .

Like I say, caviar is expensive; just how expensive and why I can't say because Stop & Shop and Roche Brothers don't carry it. Something about demand, I understand.

But the fact that the recommended wine to serve with it is champagne tells you a lot.

And then there is the story of the lady customer, nouveau riche obviously, who had the temerity to ask the waiter how come her caviar cost so much.

"Because, madam," he said, "it's a year's work for a sturgeon."

A lasting friendship that got off on the right foot (and paw)

COMMENTARY

CYNTHIA MCMANUS

The house is quiet this morning. For the first time in nearly two decades, the house is cloaked in an odd silence, one that has been absent for so long I barely remember it.

My house was filled with the typical noisy chaos that signaled the beginning of yet another busy day, but one sound was conspicuous for its absence: the clickety-click of a dog's claws striking the floor in rhythmic counterpoint to my own steps.

He was mine and I was his from the day we met, a warm late summer morning in 1985.

He had been rescued from certain death, found tied to a highway guardrail, bound with twine so coarse it rubbed a raw, red ring around his neck. Freed by the sympathetic hands of a friend, he was brought back to her home where I discovered him patiently sitting in her yard waiting (although I didn't know it at the time) for me.

His treatment up until the time of his rescue had been horrific, leaving him with a fear of people that made him somewhat peevish and cross.

As for me, I was emphatically not a dog person, never having understood the attraction to a species that seemed to involve way too much time and attention.

Our prior assumptions about one another aside, it took only a second to dawn on me that neither party would be leaving that yard without the other.

I was 28 years old, sensible and rather serious, a young woman not prone to rash acts. Nevertheless, I instantly chose to take him home because I sensed then what I know now to be true: there are choices we make that take us to places we have no clue we will ever go — and when we finally arrive at our appointed destination, we discover to our surprise that things have turned out just as they were supposed to.

And so it was for him and me.

My friend tried to warn me that my new companion had clearly been abused and would likely inflict more than occasional fearful nips, muttering darkly that I would also most assuredly have a fight on my hands just getting him into my car. I later discovered many of those things to be more or less true — but none of her predictions applied to us.

He sat quietly as I snapped his leash onto his collar — and without as much as a backward glance at my friend's astonished face, flew to the car, vaulted into the passenger seat and then, onto my lap for the ride home.

That's how I like to remember us — pilot and co-pilot setting off to discover the adventures awaiting us.

I played yin to his yang, a Heinz 57-ish jumble of inscrutable pedigree, a manic bundle of impossibly wavy/curly black and reddish-tan fur, with ears that stood away from his head when he smiled. I named him Bozo on that long ago day, because of those ears and that big clownish grin — although later in his life I began to introduce him as Boswell, so loath was I to admit I had conveyed such a goofy name on so dignified a creature.

I have to say though that he didn't seem to mind.

When he was young he would greet me every morning, flying down the hall, propelling himself forward like an out of control firecracker, leaping up to land atop the covers on my bed, flinging his not-so-insubstantial doggy self onto my chest, covering my face with excited kisses — and smiling that toothy smile.

The memory of lying nose-to-nose while he grinned and I giggled makes me laugh, even today.

For 19 years he was the constant, common thread woven into the fabric of my life, he and I weathering together the changes that marriages and divorces, births and deaths, new homes, new families and new children bring.

We lived life together, one rarely without the other, because one without the other was not us — and it became a family joke that I was likely to call to a dog that 99percent of the time was already at my feet.

He was a creature who seemed destined to tempt and thwart death almost every day of his life, regularly putting himself squarely in the middle of no end of hair-raising situations. Later in life he was diagnosed with a number of seemingly terminal conditions to which he would stubbornly refuse to succumb, so much so that his inability to gracefully accept his own mortality became another family in-joke.

But in the end his body silently surrendered to what his heart could not — and despite my fervent desire to keep him safe forever, my constant companion began to slip my grasp, leaving me to watch helplessly as the sphere of his existence diminished bit by bit as his vision failed and his gait faltered.

We said our good-byes yesterday he and I, another pair of kind hands setting him free for the last time, his release severing the cord that bound us together for most of my adult life. It left me with a profound sense of loss not only at his passing but also in the realization that the last link to the sensible young woman from that long ago summer day was now gone too.

And today, although I am older (and far less serious), surrounded by the love that being part of a family affords, I am also achingly aware that there is a void; the creature to whom I always referred as my "bestest friend" will no longer snooze contentedly by my side as I write.

Ours was — and is — a bond that enriched us in ways that aren't easily understood, even by me. I know though that our connection to one another still lives in that part of the heart where we keep the memories that really matter. It is the place where that unbreakable thread was woven, strand by strand, year by year, strengthened by a love offered unconditionally by the giver.

This was his final gift to me — and the young woman from that long ago summer morning treasures the mark that bond has left upon her heart today.

'Fargo-fiasco' snuffs out statewide smoking ban

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

As the State House experienced a modicum of quiet between the din of the gay marriage drama and the clamor of the coming budget debate, most of the hallway talk focused on a familiar topic: Tom Finneran.

But with a twist. For years, big issues and certainly budgets have generated the conversation: "What's Finneran up to?" or "Will this get by Finneran?"

But with word of an investigation in whether the speaker perjured himself in testimony about a redistricting plan for Suffolk County, a thousand inconclusive conversations were held about where that probe would lead, how it would affect Finneran's stewardship of the House, and what effect, if any, it would have on this week's debate on state spending priorities in the year ahead. In terms of real news, by far the most interesting development of the week was Susan Fargo. Lincoln's Democratic senator amazed the entire building by voting against the compromise version of her own proposal banning smoking in workplaces statewide.

At a conference committee-cum-celebration session staged to trumpet the ban's advancement, Rep. Peter Koutoujian shocked the audience by announcing there was no majority in favor of the bill on the six-member conference committee. Koutoujian and Sen. Richard Moore, D-Uxbridge, chair both the Health Care Committee and the conference committee, which had resolved differences in the House and Senate versions of the ban. Or so everyone but Fargo thought.

No one could remember a congruent situation. Other senators had spoken to Fargo the night before and expected her to support the compromise. Health advocates released a press statement hailing the expected approval of the smoking clampdown. Conferee and Rep. Rachel Kaprielian, a major smoking foe in the House, had flown back from Washington to be part of the smoking-ban celebration in Boston – and was as dumbfounded as anyone else when Fargo voted with the two Republicans on the conference committee, resulting in a tie vote and defeat for the bill.

Fargo expressed four concerns: that the bill had too many loopholes; that it could wind up hurting some small businesses; that it contains criminal instead of civil penalties in certain cases; and that she had not been fully consulted on changes to the bill, and satisfactorily responded to when she raised her concerns. Lori Fresina, spokeswoman for the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids, did indeed speak for the entire anti-smoking lobby when she reacted to Fargo's reversal. "I am disappointed, I am appalled, I am upset, I don't understand it and I can't explain it to you."

Witnesses to these kinds of surprises at the State House are never satisfied with the surface explanation given for a change of heart, but this case was remarkable for the absence of skullduggery-based speculation. Fargo clearly had not won many admirers for switching her position so unexpectedly and so late, but no one was suggesting nefarious intent.

If anything, Fargo's staff was wondering why the conference session/press conference had been scheduled when the senator had made clear she had concerns and felt they hadn't been addressed. The spectacle was a classic mix of State House politics, process and personality – and policy, don't forget, and mystery.

By the time last week ended, both sides seemed in agreement on at least one hopeful note: there may still be processes by which the measure can be reworked, revived and moved forward — though no one was prepared to articulate exactly how.

"Rarely do we have the opportunity to literally save lives, and in this legislation that's what we could accomplish," Koutoujian told the Globe. "We've lost this opportunity for right now, but we haven't given up."

The Fargo fiasco provided the biggest headlines in a reasonably slow Patriots Day/school vacation week.

• This week in gay marriage — It wouldn't be Massachusetts state government if there weren't some to-and-fro over gay marriage. This week's developments had Rep. Emile Goguen, D-Fitchburg, vowing to file a bill of address to remove justices who legalized marriage for gay couples. A group of lawmakers on the other side filed a bill striking down the state's 1913 law against wedding couples who couldn't be legally joined in other states. And Gov. Mitt Romney said he'd stay out of an effort to pursue a goal he supports. Catholic Action League said it was petitioning the SJC to stay the issuance of same-sex marriage licenses until November of 2006 — the earliest voters could hold a referendum on full marriage for gay couples. Romney indicated he didn't believe the Action League's bid had a plausible chance. Romney said he'd keep pushing his own bill to secure special counsel and seek a stay of the court's ruling. That bill may not even get a public hearing.

• Preston: house Medicaid budget based on politics, not reality — Secretary of Health and Human Services Ronald Preston said the House misdirects hundreds of millions of dollars from Medicaid coverage for low-income recipients of MassHealth, irresponsibly permitting spending on other areas important to the health care industry, such as payment rate hikes for providers. Preston said enrollment in MassHealth will grow 7 percent, not the 4 percent included in House budget calculations.

• Romney: municipal over-generosity exacerbates crisis — In a speech to the Metro South Chamber of Commerce, Gov. Romney said a big part of the financial difficulties plaguing cities and towns is caused by overspending on the part of the municipalities. In particular, Romney said, communities are being too generous with worker raises, and the state isn't doing enough to limit the pay hikes.

• Scores of asbestos violations generate $1.2 million in fines — A springtime sweep by the Department of Environmental Protection found 45 places where asbestos was being handled improperly. Fines for just the February and March violations total $1.2 million. "Three words can sum this up – asbestos can kill," said Assistant Attorney General James Milkey, who participated in the inspections.

• SJC rejects one of last bars to runway — The Supreme Judicial Court rejected a lawsuit by the town of Hull that claimed state officials misled the Environmental Protection Agency in the process of winning approval for a new runway at Logan International Airport. The rejection is seen as clearing one of the last possible obstacles to construction of the new runway, a source of a quarter-century of controversy.

• Rep. Demakis leaving House for graduate school — Paul Demakis, a Boston Democrat and frequent critic of Speaker Finneran, announced this will be his fifth and final term in the House. He'll step down to pursue a master's degree in law and diplomacy at the Fletcher School.

Rough landing for runway suit

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The towns of Hingham, Cohasset, and Hull have been dealt another blow in their attempts to stop the construction of an additional runway at Logan Airport.

Last week, the state Supreme Judicial Court dismissed a lawsuit initially filed by the town of Hull in Plymouth Superior Court two years ago, which the judge ultimately threw out. But after the judge granted permission to do so, Hull appealed to the higher court. That court's ruling last week came as a disappointment to project opponents.

A few months ago, the United States Court of Appeals upheld the Federal Aviation Administration's (FAA) approval of the controversial new 5,000-foot runway, dismissing opponents' arguments as "meritless." The court case stemmed from claims that the Environmental Impact Report for the project was flawed.

Although neither Hingham nor Cohasset was a party in the Hull lawsuit, both communities provided financial support.

The main issue, according to Attorney William Golden, who represented Hull in the lawsuit, was the Town of Hull's allegation that MassPort had filed false information that underreported the amount of ozone gases that the project would produce "and thereby avoided any regulatory oversight to control air pollution."

Golden said recent changes in the law have created a situation where the public has less say in matters of this kind than was previously the case.

Following the United States Court of Appeals decision three months ago, Massport spokesperson Jose Juves said the ruling reaffirmed "eight years of extensive environmental analysis and public process. . . . This decision reiterates that a lot of the claims made by opponents are baseless."

Project opponents disagree, remaining firm in their stand against the runway. They are concerned that the new runway will direct many thousands more flights annually over Boston Harbor, which would impact all three towns. Key issues include noise, air quality, and potential negative property value impacts. The existing noise is already unbearable before even adding in additional air traffic from the new runway, concerned citizens say.

The next step, according to Golden, is "to go back to the political process and demand that a cost-benefit study be done. The current price range for the new runway is between $50 and $100 million."

Golden said that eight out of every 10 new passengers goes through the Providence or Manchester airports rather than through Logan Airport. "That factor combined with the post-September 11 reduction in air travel means there's no justification today for the new runway," he said. "Because of the growth of those two airports and the negative impacts of the new runway, it would be very difficult to justify it on an economic basis [either]," he further stated.

The good news, though is that a $3 million study of noise associated with flight paths to and from Logan Airport designed to help keep the skies quieter and safer was a result of the litigation. The noise study is a requirement of a 2002 legal order by Jane Garvey, who was the Administrator of the FAA at that time. That decision authorized the construction of Runway 1432 at Logan but specified several mitigation measures to lessen the impact of aircraft noise on communities in the Greater Boston area.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls from prior sessions. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

MORE TIME TO READ CONSOLIDATED BUDGET AMENDMENTS (H 4646)

House 59-91, rejected a rule change prohibiting any "consolidated amendment" to the $22.5 billion fiscal 2005 state budget from being considered on the House floor until one hour after it is filed and made available to House members. Consolidated amendments are packages that are drafted by the House leadership in a separate room outside of the House chamber during House debate on the budget. For example, members who have filed individual amendments relating to veterans are invited into the room to discuss their proposals. A consolidated amendment dealing with veterans' issues is eventually drafted and proposed as a package in place of the individual amendments. Supporters of the one-hour rule said it is unfair to begin debate and to vote on these lengthy amendments prior to legislators having an opportunity to even read them. They noted that the one-hour rule would give legislators time to see if the leadership kept its commitment to include some of the individual amendments as part of the consolidated one. Opponents of the one-hour rule said all members are welcome to attend and offer their input at the meetings. They argued that the one-hour rule would unnecessarily delay action on the budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the one-hour rule. A "Nay" vote is against it).

ADDITIONAL TIME TO FILE BUDGET AMENDMENTS (H 4646)

House 32-116, rejected a rule change giving members four days instead of three days to file amendments to the House version of the $22.5 billion fiscal 2005 state budget. Supporters of the additional day said that the budget is a lengthy and complicated one that is being considered amidst a fiscal crisis. They argued that members need additional time to read the document and draft amendments. Opponents of the additional day said that three days is sufficient and noted that electronic filing of amendments has made the process faster and more efficient. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing an additional day for the filing of amendments. A "Nay" vote is against the additional day).

ADOPT LOCAL AID RESOLUTIONS EARLIER (H 4658)

House 23-134, rejected an amendment to resolutions stating the intent of the Legislature regarding how much local aid it would provide in the fiscal 2005 state budget and how it would be distributed. The amendment states that it is the intent of the House and Senate, beginning next year, to annually adopt these local aid resolutions by February 15. Amendment supporters said that April is too late for some cities and towns to know how much they would receive from the state. They argued that adopting resolutions earlier would help communities plan their budgets. Amendment opponents said that a February deadline is too early and noted that the House Ways and Means Committee has not even crafted a budget proposal by that date. They argued that the House informs cities and towns as soon as possible but should not have its hands tied by some arbitrary date. (A "Yea" vote is for stating the intent of the House and Senate to annually adopt local aid resolutions by February 15. A "Nay" vote is against stating it).

ALSO UPON BEACON HILL

GAY MARRIAGE-Debate on both sides of the gay marriage issue continued last week as the May 17 date for allowing same-sex unions approaches. Rep. Robert Spellane (D-Worcester) filed a bill repealing a 1913 law that prohibits out-of-state couples from getting married in Massachusetts if their home state does not recognize the union. Rep. Emile Goguen (D-Fitchburg) filed legislation to remove from the bench the four justices who voted to legalize gay marriage. Meanwhile, the Senate has not yet admitted Gov. Romney's bill asking the legislature to allow him to hire a special counsel to argue for a stay of the Supreme Judicial Court's (SJC) gay marriage ruling until November 2006— the date a ballot question banning gay marriage but legalizing civil unions could go on the ballot if it is approved by next year's Legislature. The House has already admitted Romney's bill. On another front, the Catholic Action League of Massachusetts has filed a separate petition asking for the same delay.

UNDERAGE DRINKING LAWS- A group of high school students who attended a Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) summit in March announced their top ten recommended new laws to prevent underage drinking. The proposals include raising the penalties for adults who provide alcohol to minors, repealing the current law that allows minors under age 21 to serve and sell alcohol in places like restaurants, requiring a mandatory science-based alcohol education and prevention curriculum for middle and high school students and making alcohol training mandatory for servers every three years.

ATTACKING OR STEALING GUIDE DOGS (H 2829)- The House gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a bill allowing a physically impaired person to file a suit for damages against anyone who steals or attacks the person's guide dog or against the owner of any animal that attacks the guide dog.

Another view on the village revitalization project

AL MOORE

The Planning Board presented the following letter to the Board of Selectmen on Tuesday night:

At the urging of several Village merchants and interested citizens, the Planning Board has, over the past several weeks; met three) times to discuss both the issued Bid Package for the Village Revitalization Project, and the engineering assumptions of the James Brook Flood Control Project as now conceived. These recent meetings are in addition to the several previous meetings at which we have reviewed the Village project over the past two years. Please accept our Summary Comments and Recommendations, below.

• Summary Comments: We understand that you have been provided with copies of our most recent meeting minutes and correspondence regarding the Projects. Should you wish closer review of our recent work, we can provide you with a detailed narrative, notations to our meeting minutes, references to the project design sheets, and copies of correspondence with our retained civil engineer, Mr. John F. Modzelewski, P.E., of Civil Designs Inc.

Our recent work was conducted following our receipt of the 100 percent design set of plans titled "Town of Cohasset Village Infrastructure and Streetscape Improvements" (46 sheets), all dated March 5, 2004 and rendered by The Waterfield Design Group, Inc.; and of the bid package titled Village Infrastructure Improvements, dated April 1, 2004, also composed by Waterfield. Additionally, we have discussed summary statements regarding the James Brook Project, but have not reviewed the plans or bid package for that project.

We have been gratified that a group of Cohasset residents who are professionals in the architectural, construction, and project management fields have joined several Village merchants in coming forward to offer their time and talents without remuneration in order to assist in improving the outcomes of the Projects. We have developed our Summary Comments and Recommendations in large measure based on the professional opinions of these residents. David Calhoun, Erica Rice, Bill Good, George McGoldrick, Tom Hamilton, Jim Sandell, Wayne Sawchuk, and James Watson have been instrumental in helping us organize a new suggested approach to the Projects. Additionally, we appreciate the effort of your colleague Ralph Dormitzer in moving this collective effort ahead; the attendance at one or more of our meetings by Selectmen Fred Koed, Rob Spofford, and Michael Sullivan; and the time of utility consultant Jeffrey Martin, formerly retained by the Cohasset Revitalization Corp. (CRC), in offering his specific expertise.

A Project reduced in its size but correctly configured is far preferable to a Project that injures Village aesthetics, requires significant further public expenditure, causes repeated disruption, and potentially creates a worse flooding problem.

In summary, the Planning Board makes eight Comments on the Projects:

1.1 Village Bid Package is Not Effectively Competitive: The limited number of contractors (we understand a total of 3 to date, with 2 remaining in the process) that have requested copies of the Village Infrastructure Improvements Bid Package demonstrates that the bid is not nearly as competitive as it should be for a job of this size. The professionals we have consulted believe that this fact is most likely the result of the level of detail contained in the specifications, and the project phasing requirements of the package (Ref.: 1.8.2, below). The Taxpayers of the Commonwealth and of the Town will not realize the best return on the expenditure of public funds on the Project unless this non-competitive bid environment can be corrected.

1.2 Poured Concrete Sidewalks Will Harm Village Aesthetics: The poured concrete sidewalks proposed by the design and Bid Package will greatly damage the aesthetics of the Village, introducing a sterile urban look into what is widely recognized as an attractive small town center. Such an unfortunate and unintended outcome is particularly troubling as the Village sits adjacent to the Common Historical District, which clearly has its own intrinsic aesthetic value.

1.3 Composite Concrete Pavers as Alternative to Poured Concrete : Composite concrete Pavers — seen in many contemporary public and private sector projects in which aesthetics are of prime consideration — are an excellent alternative to poured concrete. Pavers are less costly than brick installations. Tom Hamilton has determined in conversations with the Public Works Department of the City of Boston that the City's current sidewalk specifications do not require concrete or asphalt underlayment to secure the pavers in place. Standard mason's sand works well, according to City officials. Of critical importance is the added benefit that pavers installed in sand can easily be taken up to accommodate the installation of utility laterals in the future (Ref.: 1.4). The current design reflects neither of these benefits.

1.4 Provisions for Undergrounding of Aerial Utility Plant: The plans make no provision for the installation of main line utility conduit installed through the streets of the Project Area. This infrastructure, installed to the specifications of the utilities themselves (electric, telephone, cable TV), can easily be planned and constructed now in order to avoid significant and costly disruption of the Village streetscape in the future. Manholes, handholds, and stubouts from the main line ducts to the edge of the sidewalks should also be installed now so that lateral installation into served buildings can be achieved in the future, as per the concrete paver method suggested above (Ref.: 1.4). No utility cable or wires need be installed at this time, in order to save monies expended. Planning Board member Pratt has reviewed this suggested plan with Mr. Jeffrey Martin, the utility consultant formerly retained by the CRC. Mr. Martin states his agreement with this strategy, inclusive of the use of pavers laid in sand that accommodate the lateral installation process going forward.

1.5 Parking Space Array and Sizing: Planning Board member Sturdy has expressed strong concern that the design of parking on-street parking spaces could become a bad legal precedent for the Town. As we have discussed with the Selectmen, Planning Board regulations and Zoning Bylaws require spaces configured differently. The Planning Board concurs with member Sturdy that at the very least, Town Counsel should be asked for a written opinion on the potential of precedent being established that could be used to undercut the enforcement of Town parking requirements going forward. We also agree with Village merchants that parking spaces are still not optimized to provide for maximum parking, especially along South Main Street from Cohasset Hardware to Dependable Cleaners.

chants and professionals that if the Project Area includes Elm Street, from South Main to Brook, sidewalk widths and curb reveal heights will make impossible the extent of on street parking now existing. Excluding or diminishing the current number of vehicles that can park on Elm will have a severe negative impact on the businesses located in this short street block. Professionals at our meetings concurred that the problem is engendered by Town use of sate monies to conduct work on Elm Street. If state or federal funds are used, modern specifications have to be employed which would wipe-out most of the on-street parking

1.7 James Brook Flood Control Project: The James Brook Flood Control Project significantly intersects the Village Revitalization Project in terms of both funding and construction management. The main channel of the James Brook transits the Village via an underground culvert installed roughly from the vicinity of the Strawberry Parfait building (Pleasant St. at James Lane), to the closed culvert outfall of the Brook into Jacobs Meadow at the Masonic Building (off Brook Street). If the proposed next phase of the James Brook Flood Control Project is not engineered correctly, any effort to resolve design errors going forward would cause significant further expenditure of public monies, necessitated by the digging of new channel ways through the reconstructed Village and Town Parking Lot.

The two professional services firms that have both investigated the continued flooding of the James Brook, and proposed designs for flood mitigation, Waterfield and Tutela, have presented to the Town engineered solutions which are not compatible. Each of the two concepts for flood mitigation in the Village area are based on separate and distinct flood level and associated engineering calculations. Earlier this month, residents on lower Pleasant Street, lower Ripley Road, and Elm Street have reported significant inundation of their properties resulting from the Spring rains of this year. The possibility exists that oneor both engineering calculations for the James Brook Project are incorrect.

1.8 Project Management: Project Limits, Critical Path, and Phasing

1.8.1 The Town should reduce the limits of the Project, if necessary, in order to remain within established budgets. A Project reduced in its size but correctly configured is far preferable to a Project that injures Village aesthetics, requires significant further public expenditure, causes repeated disruption, and potentially creates a worse flooding problem.

1.8.2 We discussed the requirement for phased work to be conducted by the bid selected contractor(s), and understand the Town's desire to maintain traffic flow to Village businesses for as l9ong as possible. Significant discussion suggested that the Project would be better managed if a 'blitz' period of intense work were allowed and requested in the Bid Package. Such a schema would allow some night work in the Project Area, and authorize the shut down of some streets for expedited timeframes. We believe the phasing goal actually will drive up both Project costs, and total time over which traffic to local businesses will be disrupted.

1.8.3 We discussed the Project elements requiring work for the Water Department. Our consensus is that coordination must exist between the Village streetscape Project and the Water Department work. We would like to see the bid documents better breakout the separate costs attributable to Water Department work.

In summary, the Planning Board believes that if the Village Project is conducted as reflected in the Bid Package, the Project will do irreparable damage to the character of Cohasset Village, and will trigger unnecessary spending of Town funds to correct problems going forward. Significant among such problems requiring corrective work, is the failure of the current Project to provide for underground conduits for the eventual placement of utility plant now conducted aerially through the Village. Equally as troubling is the lack to date of peer reviewed engineering, in an effort to arbitrate the engineering differences between Tutela and Waterfield as regards the planned phase of the James Brook Project.

2.0 Recommendations: The Planning Board urges the Board of Selectmen to implement the following four primary recommendations relative to the Village Revitalization and James Brook Flood Control Projects. Not one of these Recommendations is made lightly. None of them are typical to a civil engineering project conducted by a town in Massachusetts. At this point however, there is nothing typical about either project in terms of the lack of a public consensus reached, the potential non-competitive bid environment, and high probably of future disruption of the work area to correct the failures of the currently conceived project. Frankly, we believe that extraordinary steps are needed immediately.

The Planning Board therefore recommends:

2.1 Halt Bidding and Contracting Processes: The Board of Selectmen should immediately halt the bidding process now being conducted for the Village streetscape work, and the contract award of the James Brook Project. Recovery by the Town of all work product of any and all consultants, engineers, or other professionals employed to date on the Projects should be executed immediately in this regard.

2.2 Appoint a Project Coordination and Oversight Committee: The Board of Selectmen should immediately appoint a Project Coordination and Oversight Committee for Village and James Brook Projects, such Committee to be comprised of, at a minimum David Calhoun, George McGoldrick, Tom Hamilton, Jim Sandell, Wayne Sawchuck, and Bob Sturdy. The Committee shall be charged with providing guidance to the Selectmen for the conduct of the Projects going forward.

2.3 Communicate with EOTC and MHD: The Board of Selectmen should immediately communicate with the agencies of the Commonwealth that fund the PWED grant for the Village Project. The office of Secretary of the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction (EOTC), and the Massachusetts Highway Department (MHD) should understand the Town's intention to complete as much Project work as possible by June 30, 2005; and possibility that some portion of the Project work may be commenced prior to that date, but not completed by then. Further, the Town, in consultation with the agencies, should understand the 10percent project cost apportionment cap for design services. We understand that an applicable official at MHD has stated that a Project timeframe moving beyond June 30 2005 is acceptable to the Commonwealth.

2.4. Issue Specific Charge to Project Coordination and Oversight Committee: The Board of Selectmen should immediately charge the Project Coordination and Oversight Committee with the development of a Project Plan and Critical Path Schedule that shall:

2.4.1 Effect the installation of concrete pavers in the sidewalk layouts of the Project area, with sand as the specified underlayment for the pavers, rather than the use of poured concrete at the surface, and/or poured concrete or asphalt for the underlayment.

2.4.2 Effect the installation of adequate main line utility conduit, and associated manholes, handholes, lateral stub outs and like facilities, all to support the eventual placement in such infrastructure of utility wires and cables now conducted aerially through the project area.

2.4.3 Cause the installation of such utility infrastructure in compliance with specifications of the utility firms now operating distribution plant in the Village (Comcast, Massachusetts Electric, Verizon).

2.4.4 Work in harmony with the Cohasset Sewer and Water Commissions such that the currently installed utility infrastructure of the Commissions in the Village may be overhauled, upgraded, or otherwise reconstructed in an effectively phased manner in relation to the Projects.

2.4.5 Provide for engineering peer review of the calculations, engineering assumptions, and plans of both Waterfield and Tutela for the James Brook Project, and proceed with a design that emerges from the confirmed engineering assumptions agreed to. The Committee and Selectmen should also hold a public hearing on the matter so that all interested citizens, property owners, and business owners may understand the flood control ramifications of the various strategies proposed. Public hearings are required when expending federally derived flood control monies. Although the PWED grant is (nominally) funded with monies from the Commonwealth, the Town needs to preserve its ability to receive further federal funding in the James Brook flood corridor. The Planning Board would be happy to assist the Committee in this undertaking, and suggests that Mr. John Modzelewski of the firm Civil Designs Inc., could work to provide the needed peer review of the two (2) engineering solutions proposed.

2.4.6 Coordinate with the timeframe and cost requirements of EOTC / MHD.

HAPPENINGS

Abbey plant sale

The Glastonbury Abbey Plant sale will be held from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Saturday, May 8.

A large selection of plants will be available for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Rt. 28) in Hingham.

Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses, bushes, fruits and vegetables will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local private gardens in the South Shore area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in Abbey gardens. Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who attend the sale. Proceeds go to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue beautification of the Abbey Grounds.

Church fundraiser at 2nd Congregational

The Second Congregational Church will be conducting a fundraising Time and Talent Auction at Bates Hall in the Church on Saturday evening May 1, beginning at 7 p.m.

More than 100 items have been donated to the auction, including vacation rentals, Red Sox/Yankees tickets, original works of art by local artists, and much more.

Reservations are being accepted for tables of six or more by calling the church office at 781-383-0345 or e-mail: scc@2ndcc.org.

Boston Pops benefit for S.S. Art Center

This summer, the South Shore Art Center kicks off its 50th anniversary celebration with a benefit performance of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, Keith Lockhart conductor in Cohasset, July 31.

The concert brings the world-renowned artistry of Keith Lockhart and the Pops to the South Shore for the first time ever. The South Shore Music Circus' intimate summertime setting is the perfect place to enjoy the incomparable virtuosity of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra while supporting the education and exhibition programs at the South Shore Art Center. South Shore residents can enjoy the internationally acclaimed Boston Pops right in their own backyards.

A limited number of special ticket packages, which include receptions with maestro Keith Lockhart before and after the concert, can be purchased from the South Shore Art Center only. Call the Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org for more information about these gala benefit events. All other tickets for this Pops concert can be purchased via Ticketmaster at 617-931-2787 or in person at the Music Circus box office beginning Saturday, April 10. The performance is July 31, at 7 p.m. Tickets are priced at $101.25 and $90.25.

She's at it again

After a week of inactivity on most of our high school sports fronts in deference to the April school vacation, we were all primed to get back to it Monday, coaches, athletes, parents, fans and intrepid reporters.

But noooooooo. Thanks again, Ma.

Monday downpours not only washed out everything across the board on that day, but rendered many of the fields unusable on Tuesday, leaving us, literally, with nothing to write about on many beats.

The concern for causing real harm to fields remains a huge issue. It will take many more days like sunny Wednesday before area ADs will again start sleeping peacefully through the night.

So here we are again on Tuesday night wondering just what we can do to fill these big sports pages.

Oh, I know:

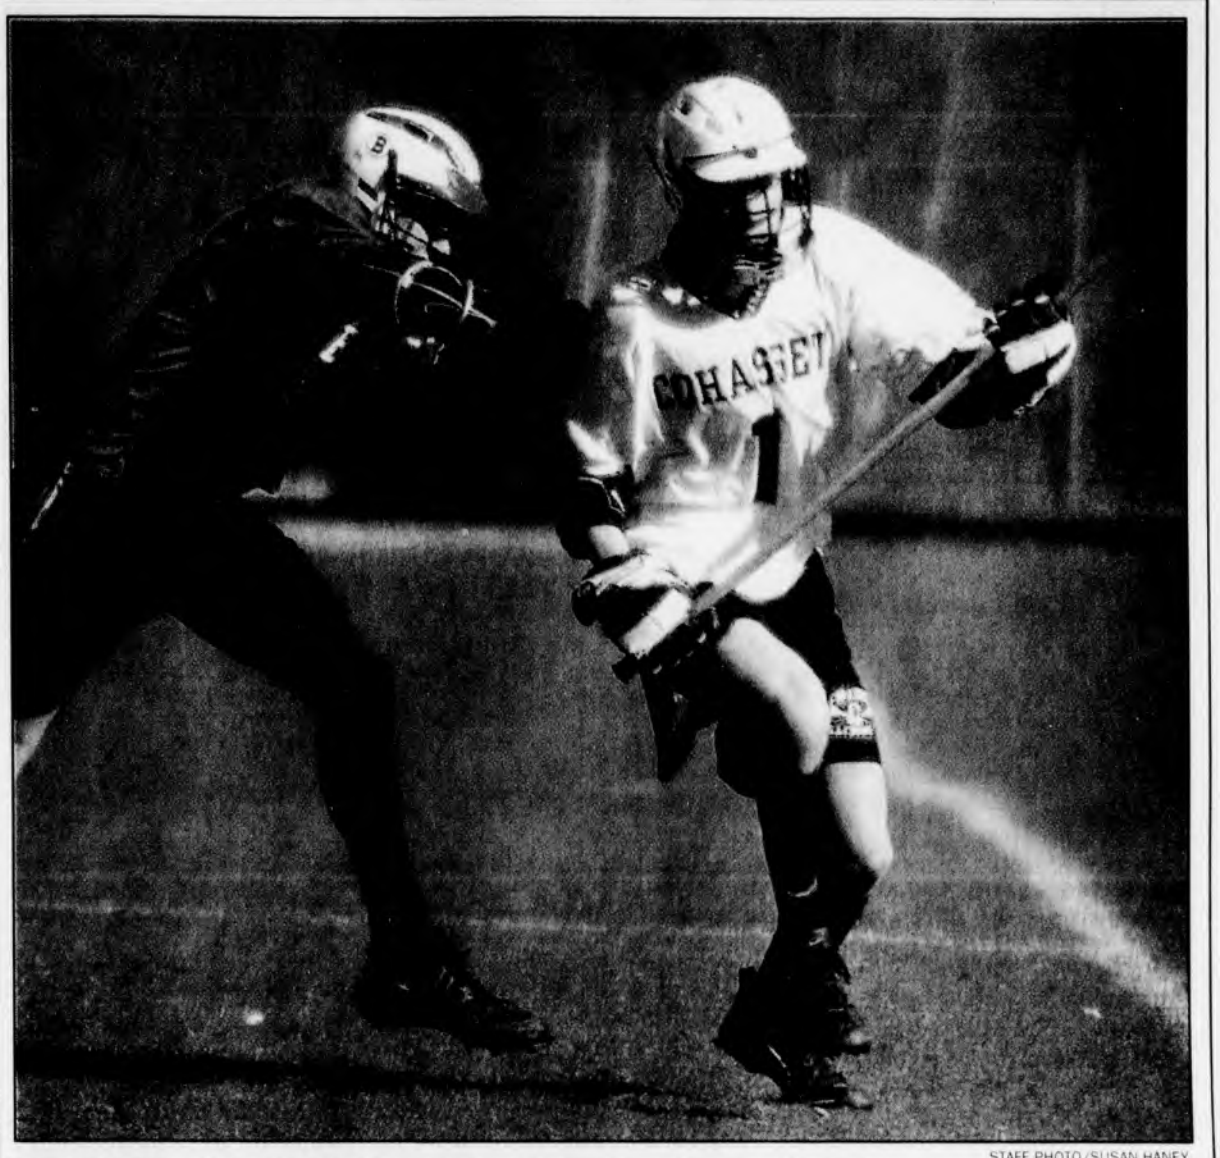
Finally, a real bona fide rationale for disliking the New York sports fans: the predominant booing of Derek Jeter and Bernie Williams this weekend. Combined, these two have earned eight World Series rings as members of the Yankees, and yet the boos in the Bronx this weekend completely drowned out any cheers.

These two players have never been anything but great ambassadors for this team, these fans and their sport, not to mention a huge part of the team's success. Yet they're being widely booed over a short term slump…in April!

Nomar, sans even a trip to the World Series, suffered through much worse at the plate last September and October, and I can't remember any more than a couple of scattered boos from a few knuckleheads, and these were most often quickly drowned out by the supportive cheers of a far greater number of quick thinking intelligent fans. That made me proud to be a Red Sox fan.

The vast majority of feuding between Red Sox and Yankees fans over the years has been fun-spirited: two bodies of passionate fans, the only real difference between us being the laundry we were pulling for.

This latest episode has revealed another difference, a difference that, if I were a Yankees fan, I'd be extremely embarrassed over today.



Can you believe what the Sox

Greater defensive commitment keys CHS laxmen to first two wins

By Mike Spellman

It starts with defense.

No matter what the sport or what the level, you'd be hard pressed to find a coach who does not look to pound home this point whenever the opportunity arises.

Just cause for re-enforcing this tried and true message was hardly hard to come by for Stu Curran following all of the defensive collapses and lapses submitted by his Cohasset High boys lacrosse team against Barnstable on April 16, the end result of which was an 11-8 loss and an 0-3 record.

"And I had a full week of practice to make my point," noted Curran with a chuckle.

The laugh for the Skippers first year coach was made possible by virtue of his team winning its first two games of the season at the end of last week a on the strength of vastly improved play at the defensive end.

The Skippers pulled out a hard fought 7-6 win over St. John's in Shrewsbury Friday and then topped Scituate on the road 24 hours later, 7-5.

"I think we set the tone for defensive intensity in the St. John's game and that carried over to the Scituate game," said

Prestigious honors come to three Cohasset High coaches

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Those on the outside looking in often express wonder over the way so many teams from tiny Cohasset High are able to remain consistently competitive against opposition from far larger schools.

CHS Athletic Director Ron Ford, conversely, expresses no wonder. He has expressed many times to this typist over the last several years his belief that he has some of the finest coaches in the state working in his department.

Well, the already ample body of evidence supporting this claim has increased significantly over the last month or so, as three CHS coaches—assistant football coach Bob Silvia, head football coach Tony Rolfe and wrestling coach Torin Sweeney-- have been recognized by their peers with extremely prestigious honors.

Bob Silvia

The longtime CHS assistant football coach was part of this year's class of inductees to the Mass. High School Football Coaches Hall of Fame, and was honored at a banquet this past Sunday alogn with his fellow inductees. The event was attended by several current and former members of the CHS football

Depth the difference

Scituate lady laxers wear down Cohasset in 11-8 win

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Depth was clearly the difference for the Scituate High girls lacrosse team in their win over Cohasset, Tuesday afternoon at home, 11-8.

The visiting Lady Skippers jumped out quickly, their well balanced offense striking early and often as they took a 7-5 lead into the halftime break.

Cohasset seniors Meg Marr and Nicole Turgiss each finished with two goals for the game, as did junior Lauren Rizzotti and sophomore Lisa Spirito.

The second half was dominated by the deeper host squad, though, as they outscored the visitors from the North by a 6-1 margin over the final 25 minutes to take the 11-8 decision.

"The difference was (Scituate coach) Paula Evans had very good players coming in off the bench, and we just couldn't keep up," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "They just totally outplayed us in the second half.

"Our offense was clicking, but we just couldn't move the ball to them in the second half. We were getting killed in the midfield, turning the ball over and getting beat to every ball on the ground."

The Skippers were clearly feeling the absence of senior captain Ashley Faber. The star midfielder and force at both ends of the field had a family event to attend.

"We were getting killed in the midfield. We usually look to Ashley when we need a lift there."

The two teams entered the game with matching 2-2 records, so the Sailors went a game above the magic .500 mark, while the Cohasset girls fell below it for the first time this season.

Coach Evans credited sophomore netminder Darby St. Clair-Barrie for keeping the Lady Sailors close enough to come

Squirts come up big to take title

Squirt C3

The Squirts C3 capped off a terrific season with a thrilling 4-2 victory over Hanover Saturday and earned themselves the title "Yankee Conference Squirt Champion."

From the opening puck drop, the Stars were the aggressors as they continuously buzzed the Hanover net like a horde of killer bees. Only minutes into the game the Hanover netminder rejected point blank shots by Sam Labo and Willy Brown, with Vinny Calorio stuffing home the third chance.

Minutes later it was a different line, same story, as both Johnny Sinkins' and Mike Masciulli's close range shots were stifled, with Ally Ryan finally striking gold on the third chance.

With Hanover trying build some offensive steam, Willy Brown stripped the puck from the right wing and threaded the needle with a pinpoint shot through an opening in the goalies pads.

With a 3-0 lead to start the second period, the Stars didn't let up.

The shorthanded defensive crew of Mike Timcoe, Justin Henriksen & Ryan Foohey applied pressure at both ends of the ice and denied all Hanover puckhandlers the center lanes.

A Hanover rush out of their own end was broken up by Timcoe, and then Henriksen who fired the puck to Vinny Calorio who one-timed it into the top left corner for his second goal of the game and a 4-0 lead.

Goalie Alec "Black Hole" Hurd smothered a number of Hanover shots with his trusty glove and didn't allow any second chances. Hanover managed to punch in two quick goals with minutes remaining but the damage was already done. As the final buzzer sounded the Stars poured onto the ice and did their best imitation of a WWF smackdown.

Congratulations to the Champion Stars.

Coastal Stars Mite B's are number one

After finishing the regular season as the South Shore Conference Champions with a record of 20-2-2, the Coastal Stars beat Hingham Red and then Weymouth to advance to the Championship game on Thursday, April 15th versus Hingham White.

With a 1-1-1 record against this team, the Stars figured they would have a tough game ahead and the team that scored first would have the edge. Jack Kuppens proved this theory to be true as he split the defense on a breakaway and roofed the puck past the Hingham goaltender with less then two minutes into the game putting the Stars up 1-0 never to look back.

This score held going into the 2nd period when Peter Bent put the puck on the stick of David Cataldo who lifted the puck over the goalies shoulder to make it 2-0.

Hingham got on the board five minutes into the 2nd period, closing the gap to 2-1. But the Stars quickly responded when Jake Timcoe passed the puck up the boards to Brandon Winn waiting on the wing who skated in alone and beat the goalie glove-high giving the Stars a 3-1 lead.

Jack Kuppens made it 4-1, scoring his second of the night after receiving a pass from Nate Morse. Then Brandon Winn tallied his second to put the Stars up 5-1 with a nice backhand shot, which was assisted by Brendon Crane and Mike O'Brien.

Hingham scored late in the second when the puck deflected into the Stars net ending the period at 5-2. The Stars team sensed victory and tightened up, keeping Hingham from getting any momentum.

Highlights included the versatile Joe Lasko helping out the speedy Matt Burchill bust up Hingham's breakout opportunities.

Defensemen Tommy Powers, Patrick Holway and Mike Hutchinson were steady on D and helped out in the offensive end by keeping the puck in the Stars zone.

The hustling play of Max Montgomery got the Stars offense going on several occasions and Nick Mulrey won several key face-offs at the end of the game to keep possession of the puck protecting the Stars lead. Goaltender Joey Commesso, who came into this game after allowing the conference's lowest goals against in the regular season, faced many quality shots and came up big on several occasions frustrating Hingham as they attempted to mount a comeback bid.

The team is made up of 8 and 9 years olds from Cohasset and Marshfield and led by Head Coach Charlie Mulrey and Assistant Coaches Dan Bent, Mike Timcoe and Mike O'Brien.

South Shore Basketball shooting clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept registrations at Town Hall for an off-season basketball shooting clinic for boys and girls, grades 6 through 12.

The clinic will be coached by Paul-Michael Quintin and be limited to 15 participants in each of the two sessions. The fee for this program that will meet Tuesday and Thursday evenings from April 27 through June 3 is $115 per player.

Session I, for boys and girls grades 6 to 8, meets from 5 to 6:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School gym.

community.

"It was a well deserved honor," said Ford. "Bob has worked hard and done a lot for this town and the youth of the town."

Silvia, who is also Cohasset's Fire Chief, has been an assistant football coach at CHS since 1982, serving as Defensive Coordinator the last few years. His work with the Skippers defensive units were key to the team's run to South Shore League championships and runs to the Super Bowl playoffs in 2001 and 2003.

"Our (Statistical) numbers on defense were among the best in the state the last three years, and that's despite the fact we don't have anywhere near as many players as most schools," noted Ford. "I'd say that gives you a pretty good idea of what kind of coach Bob is."

Silvia also stepped in to help with the transition when a new boys lacrosse coach was named this season. The new coach, Stu Curran, was away on Reserve duty at the beginnign of spring workouts, and Silvia stepped in to help get the laxmen ready for the season.

Silvia makes the third Cohasset High coach to be enshrined in the state football coaches hall of fame, as he joins Evie Dorr and Frank Almeida, who were both head football coaches at CHS.

Tony Rolfe

Rolfe, the sixth year CHS head football coach, has been named to be head coach of the South team for the 2004 Shriner's high school game. The annual showcase for top high school senior players will be held at Bentley College in July (more details to follow).

Rolfe has directed the Skippers to South Shore League championships and runs to the Super Bowl playoffs in 2001 and 2003. Playing in that game will be be two stars from Rolfe's 2003 championship team, soon-to-be CHS graduates Chris Bilodeau and Steven Davis.

Torin Sweeney

Sweeney was named the NIAAA Section 1 Wrestling Coach of the Year at the annual Massachusetts Secondary Schools Athletic Director Association banquet, held on March 17.

The National Interscholastic Athletic Administrators Association (NIAA) only chooses a handful of coaches nationwide for this honor each year. Section 1 covers all of New England as well as New York and New Jersey. Sweeney, who notched his 200th career coaching win this winter while leading his wrestling team a league championship, is now up for the NIAAA's National Wrestling Coach of the Year Award.

Sweeney has been CHS' head wrestling coach for the last 21 years, and is also currently the school's head golf coach in the fall and head girls lacrosse coach in the spring. He was also an assistant football coach for several years at CHS.

"I'm extremely prod to be associated with all three of these coaches," said Ford.

bullpen is doing right now? 24-2/3 scoreless innings at the time of this writing. Remember where we were at this time last April. Can you imagine where we would have been at the end of April, 2003 with this bullpen and that team? I challenge anyone to come up with a greater one-month statistical turnaround than this in Boston sports history?

So, Celtics fans, do you feel better about things now that your team made the playoffs?

Did any of the young Celtics players who are purportedly the future of this franchise—Ricky Davis, Jiri Welsch, Chris Mihm, Marcus Banks— really gain any important NBA-life lessons by being a part of the debacle that was the sweep at the hands of the top-seeded Pacers?

I doubt it, but others might disagree.

Whatever, it would be tough for any Celtics fan to deny the assertion that what unfolded on the court was not pretty. Everyone on that team folded under the pressure, no one more so than our "leader," Paul Pierce.

Speaking personally, I can't remember the last time I felt the Celtics were this far away from being a legitimate contender.

This stands in stark opposition to the way I feel regarding the Bruins.

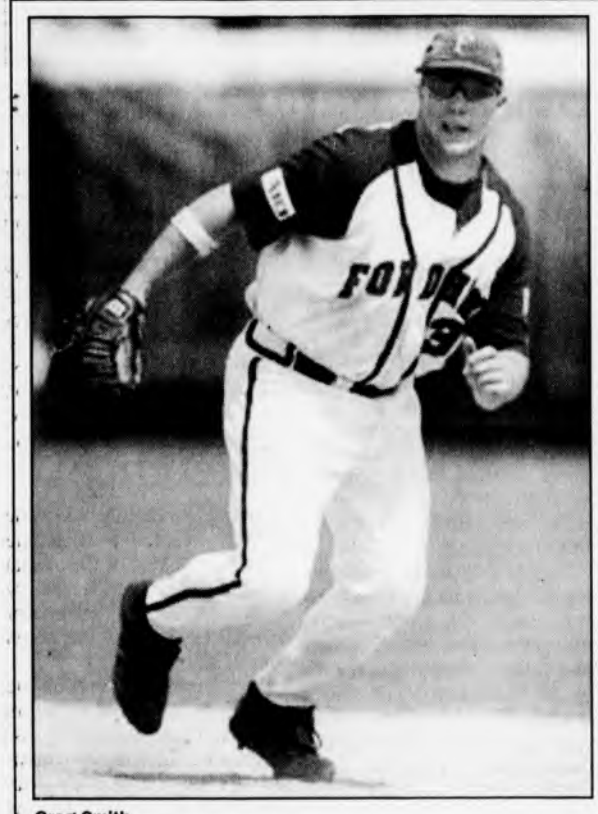
Assuming the NHL is back at its regularly appointed time next fall (and, granted, that might be a big assumption), these Bruins should, if anything, be an even better team next time around.

The best years clearly lie ahead for Patrice Bergeron, Sergei Samsonov, Andrew Raycroft, Nick Boynton, and, yes, Joe Thornton. And Sergei Gonchar, Michael Nylander, Mike Knuble, Martin Lapointe, Jiri Slegr and Glen Murray all also have plenty left to give.

Big Joe gutted it out through an excruciating rib cartilage tear in the Montreal series, and he is to be commended for the effort he gave, not crucified.

We know few people in any walk of life are as well prepared for what they do as Bill Belichick and Scott Pioli. After this past weekend's draft, however, talk of their level of preparation has clearly taken a back seat to talk regarding their incredible good luck.

The dynamic duo let Ted Washington go to free agency, a no-move repeatedly questioned in this space and many others, but then, lo and behold, Vince Wolfork (a player in seemingly all ways worth mentioning comparable to Ted Washington, but with far fewer years and at a far lesser cost) falls into their laps in the 21st spot in the first round.



There was pre-draft talk of the Pats trading up quite a bit to get this Wolfork, as he was rated top 10 on many team's draft boards and, word seemed to have it, at least top 15 on everyone's.

As for the rest of the Pats picks, who knows.

It's really amazing how much attention the draft gets, especially in these parts. After all, Belichick has picked up a lot more value via the free agency market than the annual college talent dispersal.

There are more than a few fans grousing right now about the Pats not adding a linebacker or offensive lineman with any of their eight picks. How soon they forget. Mike Vrabel, Roman Phifer, Matt Chatham and Larry Izzo were all drafted by other teams, but were key contributors as linebackers for the Patriots this past season at a very reasonable salary cap figure.

Bill and Scott no doubt already have their top 20 list of free agent/potential free agent linebackers and offensive linemen finalized. What possible reasoning would we have not to believe in them?

Greg Smith

Cohasset's Smith earns A-10Baseball Weekly Honor

Bronx, NY - (April 26, 2004) - Fordham University sophomore Greg Smith (Cohasset, MA/Boston College HS) and freshman Jordan Lert (Westport, CT/Staples) both earned his first career Atlantic 10 weekly honor, as Smith was named Atlantic 10 Baseball Co-Player of the Week, while Lert received Atlantic 10 Baseball Co-Rookie of the Week honors. Smith shares the award with Richmond's A.J. Board, while Lert shares it with Rhode Island's Stephen Holmes.

Smith, a former Post 118 Legion baseball player, was on fire this week, hitting .591 (13-for-22) with 14 runs scored, six RBI, three doubles and a home run. He also recorded a slugging percentage of .955 and an on-base percentage of .654 for the week. In his homecoming to Massachusetts, he extended his hitting streak to seven games, hitting .545 in the Rams' first-ever three game sweep of UMass (6-for-11), scoring seven runs with a double and two RBI overall. He was 3-for-5 with a pair of runs scored and an RBI in game two, while going 2-for-2 with a double, two runs scored and an RBI in game one. Smith also scored three runs in the series finale. During the week, he went a perfect 4-for-4 with four runs scored, two doubles, a home run and two RBI versus Columbia, and had a pair of hits and a pair of runs in the Rams' win versus St. Francis (NY). On the year, Smith is batting .343with 36 runs scored, seven doubles, four home runs, and 23 RBI.

The Fordham Baseball team is currently 17-20-1 overall, having won six of their last seven contests, and 8-7 in the Atlantic 10, good for second place. The Rams will next be in action on Tuesday, April 27th as they host Iona College on Jack Coffey Field at 3:30 PM.

At Hingham's Black Rock Country Club

Golfers are invited to help develop better treatments for childhood cancers and to provide services for survivors of these cancers by participating in the David B. Perini, Jr. Memorial Tournament. The event is slated to be held at the exclusive Black Rock Country Club in Hingham, Mass., on Monday, May 10.

This tournament will benefit the innovative David B. Perini, Jr. Quality of Life Program at Dana-Farber. The mission of the Perini Program is to continue to research ways of reducing or eliminating any harmful side effects of cancer treatments, and to help the increasing number of cancer survivors cope with any after-effects of their illness and treatment.

Featuring a scramble format with a shotgun start, the tournament also includes a post-tournament cocktail party, auction and dinner. Pre-registration is required. Tee-off for the David B. Perini, Jr. Memorial Tournament is scheduled for noon with registration beginning at 10 a.m. and the post-event party beginning at 5:30 p.m.

The contribution per player is $375, which includes golf, and the post-event activities; separate dinner tickets will be available for $100. Sponsor opportunities, including one or more golf slots, start at $500. For more information, contact Beth Partlow at (800) 552-6176 or email her at beth_partlow@dfci.harvard.edu.

The Perini Memorial is one of more than 150 Jimmy Fund Golf Program tournaments being held in 2004 to benefit the Jimmy Fund, a major fundraising arm of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. In its 21 seasons, the golf program has raised more than $36 million for cancer research and care for both children and adults at Dana-Farber.

Major sponsors of the Jimmy Fund Golf Program include American Airlines, Dunkin' Donuts, and Callaway/Top Flite, along with its Media Sponsor, Community Newspaper Company, Inc.

South Shore Sr. softball steps up to the plate for a fourth season

The South Shore Senior Softball League, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, opens its fourth season on Sunday, April 25. The team, open to all South Shore men aged 55 and older, meets at 10 am at the Central Park Field in Scituate.

Proving that age is no barrier to fun and athleticism, the "boys of summer" play up to three times a week in the league. Games are scheduled Sunday and Wednesday mornings at 10 am and Thursday evenings at 5 pm. There is also a traveling team available for interested players to compete in games across the state. Players can play once or three times a week, as they wish. The season runs well into the fall.

Kevin McLaughlin joins league founder Jim Hyde as league commissioner this year. Anyone interested in joining the league can call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 to obtain a registration form. Cost for the season is $30, which covers a shirt, hat and as much softball as one wants to play.

Rec. Dept. offers safe boating course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session safe boating course offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the state of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the two-session course, which will be held on two consecutive Saturdays, May 8, and May 15, from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size, and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $40 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of the text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

Curran. "Our midfielders made a commitment to getting back on defense all game long, and their help defense was a big key in holding both St. Johns and Scituate in check.

"Sometimes after a turnover at the offensive end, middies run back at maybe 85 percent, and that can be the difference between giving up a goal or making a stop. It was the difference on a few goals in the Barnstable game. But the guys were busting back flat out in the last two games, and that was a big part of our turnaround defensively."

Not to be lost in this, though, the coach noted, was the continued stalwart play of the defensive line. As expected, senior captains Conor Buick and Mike Devine have anchored the long-stick crew, and their fellow senior, Nick Murphy, has been strong between the pipes. However, pleasant surprises have been provided by juniors Casey Coleman and Crandon Leahy (a first year player), as well as freshman Jeff Brown

"Conor has probably been our key defender," noted Curran. "We match him up with the top opposing scorer and then go from there. He's been doing a very nice job game in and game out. Jeff Brown has really stepped it up too and become very consistent, especially for a freshman. He's all over the place out there, but he also plays smart positionally. He handles the pressure well. He's the product of a good youth program at Derby (Academy) and the Cohasset leagues and he's very coachable."

Devine has likewise been a key cog, rarely coming off the field. However, when the senior was slowed by a flare up of asthma and warm conditions on Saturday afternoon at Scituate, Leahy stepped in to those big shoes with nary a hiccup.

"Crandon is a big, rangy kid who makes up for his lack of experience with aggressiveness and athleticism," said the coach. "He doesn't back down from anything."

Skippers 7, St. Johns 6

The offense in the Skippers first win of the season was paced by junior Jake Previte and sophomore Aidan Buick (Conor's brother). Each attackman finished with two goals and an assist apiece. Murphy was strong in net, finishing with 11 saves.

A low scoring first half saw host St. Johns take a 3-2 lead into the halftime break, but the Skippers bounced back to score four of the five third quarter goals to take the lead for good at 6-4.

St. Johns would cut its deficit to one in the final quarter, but that's as close as it would get, as Cohasset hung on for the 7-6 victory.

Skippers 7, Scituate 5

Senior middie Mark Davis scored a game high three times in win number two on the season, but Previte fueled the attack with four assists, to go along with a solo tally. Aidan Buick chipped in with a goal and a pair of assists.

Senior DeWayne Morris had a goal and an assist and Ryan Tufts closed out the scoring.

Jake and Aidan did a nice job of getting our offense going," reported coach Curran. "We got our offense going into the crease, which was good to see."

Murphy again came up big between the pipes, stopping 13 of the 18 shots he saw.

"We had a lot of good stuff in both of those wins," concluded Curran. "We're excited right now to get those first two wins under our belts. We've definitely taken some big steps in the right direction."

Duxbury, Skippers

The Skippers were slated to get back into action tomorrow night at home versus Norwell under the lights at Alumni Field (7 p.m. start).

Youth lady laxers remain unbeaten as season resumes

After a long lay-off due to weather and school vacation, two of the three Cohasset Youth Lacrosse girls teams resumed play on Sunday, April 25 at home against Marshfield.

The day started with the Cohasset Blue 13-and-Under team (grades 5 and 6) running away from an overmatched Marshfield squad. Lindsay Allard, Amy Meikleham and Isabelle Franklin - the three 13-U girls who will represent Cohasset at tryouts for the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League all-star team next week - accounted for all of Cohasset's first-half scoring, as the home team ran out to a 6-0 halftime lead.

While it hardly seemed possible, Cohasset was even more dominating in the second half, spreading the wealth around for 10 goals from eight different players.

On the day, Allard finished with four goals and one assist, with Meikleham and Franklin adding hat tricks. Polly Murray scored twice, Hannah Burgess added a goal and an assist, and Lindsay MacNaught, Chelsea Silvia and Leigh Collins had single markers. Sophie Bertolami added an assist.

Whitney Jaffe and Olivia Murphy shared the goaltending duties, but were seldom challenged.

The 15-and-Under (grades 7 and 8) team followed with a tight contest against Marshfield's older girls.

Cohasset jumped out to an early lead as Gabriella Flibotte converted a feed from Katelyn Ryan and made it 2-0 midway through the first half on a long dash to the net by Maura Barnes. After Marshfield scored its first goal, Caitlin Mahoney netted the ball after a run across the goalmouth. Marshfield scored just before the half to bring the score to 3-2, and to signal a serious momentum shift in the game.

Throughout the second half, Marshfield dominated the action, getting more scoring opportunities and controlling the loose balls. Cohasset's defensive play, led by Rebecca Evans and Lindsay Hill, was able to keep things from getting out of hand, but two goals - one on a direct-free position - gave Marshfield a one-goal lead as the game headed down the stretch.

McKenna Teague converted a direct-free position with just over three minutes remaining in the game to tie the score. From there, Cohasset worked the ball until it had a good scoring chance, only to lose the ball in front of the net and compound the problem with a penalty.

Marshfield broke out after the referee's whistle and was able to hit its best player, Megan Daley, streaking in alone on net, but Thomson Jaffe made a one-on-one save with her shoulder as time expired to preserve a 4-4- tie. Jaffe finished with seven saves on the afternoon.

The day's play left Cohasset 2-0 on the season, with the 15-U team at 1-0-1.

The Cohasset White team's scheduled game against South Boston was canceled when the visiting team never arrived to play.

The Cohasset girls return to the field on Sunday, May 2 at Hingham on May 2.

We definitely didn't play our best the first half," said the fifth year coach. "However, Darby once again played tremendous in goal. The girls made a lot of mental errors and didn't hustle like they could have. Once they realized they had to come up with some big changes mentally and start hustling like they wanted it, they settled in and played smart and aggressively, which lead to the win."

Junior midfielder Morgan Kenney paced the comeback with four goals, Fellow junior Alyse Kennedy buried the ball three times, and Kim Berlo and Amanda Harden each chipped in with a pair of tallies.

The Scituate girls got back into action yesterday at home versus Milton in what promised to be a tough non-league tilt. Two more home games follow, as they host Notre Dame on Friday and Martha's Vineyard next Tuesday. Both games start at 4 p.m..

Learn to skate classes at Weymouth and Quincy Shea rinks

A new winter series of ice skating classes will be held at the Weymouth MDC rink located on Broad Street and at the Quincy Shea MDC rink on Willard Street. Classes are for boys and girls ages 41/2 and up as well as adults. Separate skill classes are held at the beginner, intermediate and advanced levels. Skaters can wear either figure or hockey skates and helmets are required for ages 41/2 through 7. Each class includes a small group lesson and a supervised practice.

Classes at the Weymouth O'Connell Rink are held Sundays at 5 p.m. Classes at the Quincy Shea Rink are held Fridays at 4 p.m. or Sundays at 11 a.m.

Bay State Skating School has 35 years of experience holding Learn to Skate classes. Programs are held at 15 DCR rink locations including Cambridge, Cleveland Circle, Hyde Park/Dedham, Lynn, Medford Flynn, Medford LoConte, Neponset/Dorchester, Newton - Brighton, Quincy, Revere, Somerville, South Boston, Waltham, West Roxbury and Weymouth.

Professional instructors teach beginner, intermediate and advanced levels. Many families enjoy taking the lessons together; there are separate instructors for children and adults. Have fun and learn to skate.

To register or for additional information, call the Bay State Skating School at 781-890-8480 or visit www.baystateskatingschool.org. Ice skate and feel great.

Boys Youth lax season off to a great start

Over the Spring vacation week, Cohasset Boys Youth Lacrosse got their season off to a great start with two weekends of fantastic action, spirited competition, and a lot of fun at every level. Though Mother Nature once again is making it tough to get in any real practice time, the Cohasset kids took the field with many smiles and loads of enthusiasm that seemed to make the wait worthwhile for everyone in attendance. Here's the action from the last two dates:

Recap From 4/18 Action

Boys U11 Teams

The White squad opened its 2004 campaign with a visit to Duxbury. The boys were ready to play from the outset with lots of enthusiasm, but were matched by Duxbury's skill and intensity. Duxbury jumped on top early and continued with fine playmaking throughout the game. The squad gets an "A" for effort and hustle, but unfortunately, the boys were outmatched by a more experienced Duxbury squad. Cohasset's goalies, John Mills and Jay Salerno, deserve special recognition for their tenacity in the cage and Max Montgomery scored Cohasset's only tally.

The Black team opened the season with a tough loss to Duxbury on Sunday by the score of 7-3. Chris Murphy played the whole game in goal for Cohasset and made many outstanding saves. The teams traded goals early as Alex Evans and Kyle Healy scored with an assist from Robbie Mahoney to end the half 4-2 Duxbury. Mahoney scored a goal in the second half to make the score 5-3. The defense was led by Chase Baldwin, Nate Brown and Alec Hurd who worked hard at stopping a very big Duxbury team. Other outstanding performances were by Jamie Timothy and Charlie Neeves playing their first real game ever.

The Blue team started with a strong victory over Marshfield as Danny Czerkawski and Pat McCormack both scored hat tricks. Alex Evans added a couple of goals and John Collins scored on a nice solo effort. The team also got solid mid-field play from Brendan Walsh and Teddy Patsos while Will Tetrault, Geoff Swain, and Coleman Hernon anchored the defense. Attack was led by Kyle Healy and Ryan McGovern. Brennan Bukowski played a strong first half between the pipes allowing just one goal and Kyle Healy played the second half in goal with an outstanding performance as well.

Boys U13 Teams

The Black team played a fantastic game in a hard fought 5-4 overtime loss to Duxbury. In its first outing of the year, the boys from Cohasset showed great patience with exciting ball movement, disciplined defense and outstanding goaltending from Jack Murphy and Sam Leahy. The stingy defense was led by Andrew Graham and Justin Yeager. Justin's strong transition play set the tone early for the boys in black. The Cohasset offense was led by John Kearney, Derek Youngman, Ian Quinlan, and Morgan Grasz. Cohasset received strong two way play from Chase Murphy, Sean Naughton, and Conor Queenan.

The Blue team lost a close contest to a Marshfield Team that came ready to play. In a back and forth contest that saw one score answered by another to end the first half tied at 3 with Luke Ernst netting a hat trick. Opening the 2nd half, Ernst scored again. Ian Porter was a dominating force on face-offs and also got in the scoring column with a goal. Alex Kinnealy chipped in a goal to help the effort with Jake Wheelwright coming up with several big plays and an assist as well as dominating ground balls... Also big on ground balls was Thomas Flibotte with six for the afternoon. The defense of Thomas Pecca, Mark Dick, Nick Routhier, and David Hernon kept Cohasset in the game and made it close. Goaltender Mark Seraikis kept the game close with 16 saves overall (in the 4th qtr).

The White team kicked off their season with an 8-8 tie against highly touted Duxbury. Outstanding goaltending by Chris Brown anchored a much-improved defense, and a balanced offense saw eight goals scored by seven different players. Despite minimal practice time, midfield and attack showed strong game sense in running fast breaks and a settled offense. Austin Meyers, Dean Driscoll and Alexander Everett each scored a goal and helped keep pressure on Duxbury's defense. The midfield was led by two goals from Will Wise as Cohasset was very competitive in several key fundamentals of the game, such as ground balls and face-offs.

Boys U15 Teams

The Blue Squad took on Marshfield at home Sunday afternoon in their first match of the season. Marshfield moved the ball well and was first on the scoreboard. Blue showed good individual effort, notably crease defenseman Jake Cuneo who scored on an impressive end-to-end clear and it was all-square at two each by the end of the first quarter. Cohasset ruled on possessions in the second quarter but some man-down situations allowed Marshfield to take the half-time lead 5 -3. Down by four goals early in the fourth quarter, the team pushed it to the end and showed great attitude and enthusiasm right up to the last whistle.

The White team opened up in Duxbury with an impressive win over this perennial lax powerhouse. Strong individual performances by Mark Flibotte (3G/2A) and Mike Grimm (3G/3A) kept the Duxbury defense off balance as precision team ball control created multiple scoring opportunities throughout the contest. PJ McCaw anchored the defense with Anderson Lynner and Chris Kuppens shutting down almost everything that Duxbury threw their way and Nathan Porter was almost unbeatable with 11 saves on the day. With a shorthanded roster and most of the players trying their hand at every position, Logan Chase, Chris Mills, and Andrew Bell were also able to contribute goals to this winning effort.

Boys U11 Teams

The White squad entered its second game of the season looking to avenge an opening game loss with its second match up with another skilled team from Duxbury. The team was ready from the outset, playing strong on both the offensive and defensive sides. Fine passing and great hustle marked the first half for Cohasset where Derek Froio, Blair McGowan, and Nate Morse dominated possessions and ground balls. John Mills was strong in the net and his teammates had the home team up 4-2 at the end of the first half. Cohasset continued its unselfish play in the second half with Sarah Brown leading the charge with several fast breaks backing up Willie Brown who stepped into the goal and made many great stops. Cohasset added two more scores and held off a late Duxbury rally to end the day with a 6-5 victory. Cohasset goals game from Willie Brown (2), Andrew Fontaine (2), Derek Froio, and John Mills.

The Blue Team lost to a very talented Hanover team as the visitors scored two quick goals in the first period and never looked back. Despite the dominance of the other team, Cohasset did it's best to battle them to the end and had several precision passing and possession plays that showed their true capabilities. Luke Ernst, Alex Kinneally, Olly Forrer, and Nick Lieberman all scored goals with Forrer adding an assist as well. Brendon Horigan also notched a point with an assist. Mark Seraikis held the came in check with another strong performance racking up 13 saves.

U13 Teams

The White team had a team victory over visiting Scituate on Sunday. Strong goaltending and much improved team defense helped overcome an early 4-2 deficit as clears and overall team communication continue to improve. Goalie Chris Brown turned in a strong performance in net, and the defense, anchored by Ian Porter and Will Lynner, showed great progress in keeping the opposition off balance and unable to mount much of a charge. The offensive contributions were spread out across the roster with multiple players scoring tallies including Dean Driscoll, Will Wise, and Chris Walsh.

U 15 Teams

The Blue squad was victorious in every important aspect of the game against Hanover this weekend except the final score. With barely enough players to field a team, the squad played hard until the final whistle. They controlled transitions and ground balls and moved the ball skillfully and hustled to the point where the opposing bench was heard commenting on how much our team "wanted it." The team also scored a crucial victory by outscoring Hanover in the fourth quarter. Four players contributed to five goals: Sean Silvia (2), Charlie Mushin, Andrew Smith, and Pete Ernst with Greg Gallagher getting an assist. Wes Ulmer was solid in goal behind an athletic defense led by Jake Cuneo and Johnny Wade.

The White team seemed to be clicking on all cylinders in a dominating win over Scituate. From the opening whistle, the White squad seemed to "want it" a little bit more than their opponents and usually is the case; this led to a lopsided contest in favor of the home team. Chris Kuppens played finesse defense keeping Scituate's attack off balance throughout while the offense had key contributions from John McKenna, David Toomey, PJ McCaw, and Andrew Bell. Mike Grimm and Mark Flibotte led the charge with 4 points apiece while also taking turns playing defense. Nate Porter continues to shine in the goal and chalked up another double digit save tally on the day.

Information on the other teams was not available at press time.

Tennis Tourney in memory of Barbie Gurnis

On Friday, April 30th from 7pm - 12am, a tennis tournament will be held at The Kingsbury Club (Kingston) in memory of Barbie Gurnis. Proceeds from the event will be used to support the Duxbury Bay Maritime School's "Crossroads for Kids' Maritime Adventures" program.

Maritime Adventures takes campers from Crossroads for Kids at Camp Wing in Duxbury and exposes them to sailing, rowing and marine ecology. Perhaps more importantly, the program also exposes them to the life-long lessons of responsibility and respect that are gained through these activities.

According to Ingid Drago, "Anyone who knew Barbie knows that she was an incredible athlete. She had many passions and sailing was always at the top of her list. Teaching sailing to kids who might not otherwise have that opportunity would have been something she felt was important. We are happy to have this positive way to remember a special friend."

The round robin style of play will be from 7-9pm and a reception will be held from 9-12. Players of all ability levels are welcome and encouraged to play. Food, dancing and a silent auction will also be part of the evening. Tickets for tennis and the reception are $75 per person; tickets for the reception only are $50 per person.

Tickets are available at The Kingsbury Club, the Duxbury Bay Maritime School or through Karen Butcher (934.7135), Ingrid Drago (585.8976) or Jamie Therrien (934.3223). For more information or to donate silent auction items, please call Karen, Ingrid or Jamie.

Fundraiser for Lydia set for Sunday, May 2

The Music Lady (Beth Green) and The Friends of Lydia Vigneau invite the children and families of the South Shore to an afternoon of musical entertainment on Sunday, May 2, from 3 to 4:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset (next to Town Hall).

Suggested admission is $5/person or $15/family and all proceeds will benefit Lydia Vigneau, a 3-year-old girl from the South Shore who was diagnosed with leukemia six months ago and is undergoing an intensive two-year regimen of chemotherapy.

Refreshments have been donated by Shaw's Supermarket and a raffle for children's music lessons, CDs, and hand-painted furniture will be offered. Contact Beth Green at 781-545-2685 with questions. If you are unable to attend but would like to make a donation, please send to: The Lydia Vigneau Fund, c/o 310 Beechwood St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

CHS baseball team car wash Saturday

On Saturday, May 1, the Cohasset High School Baseball team will be at Olympic Citco, downtown, to wash and dry cars starting at 9 a.m. The team is raising money to pay for a coach and a batting cage. Enter the station from the Red Lion Inn side, and drive around the back of the Citco Station. A donation is suggested.

Benefit Auction May 1

Plan a vacation to Paris and stay in a lovely one bedroom apartment. Warm up for a week in a beautiful home in Amelia Island, Fla., or stay in a spacious three bedroom home on Wilmington Island, in historic Savannah, Ga. If you would like to stay closer to home, you can travel to Sugar Hill, N.H., and spend a weekend with your friends in a beautiful 1850's estate home.

Vacation rentals, Red Sox/Yankees tickets, and Pork BBQ, Italian and Chinese dinners are just a few of the more than 100 special items being auctioned off to benefit the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset, Saturday, May 1, beginning at 7 p.m.

Admission is free, and includes beverages, appetizers and dessert. Reservations for groups of six or more are encouraged by contacting the church office at 781-383-0345 or e-mail scc@ 2ndcc.org.

Cohasset Youth movie & pizza night

There will be a movie night at the Teen Garage on Friday, April 30. This event will cost $3 per person, and everyone grades 6 and up is welcome. The movie night starts at 7 p.m. and goes until 9 p.m. Pizza will be available and a big screen TV will be used to show the move.

League annual meeting May 18

HSO Pops season finale May 8 & 9

On Mother's Day weekend, the Hingham Symphony Orchestra celebrates great music, mothers, and musicians, with their fun and festive, season-finale Pops concerts.

The concert on Saturday, May 8, at 7:30 p.m. will be held at F1 Boston, on Wood Road, Braintree. Located minutes off the highway, near South Shore Plaza, this facility's upbeat energy provides just the right tone for a Pops concert. F1's excellent kitchen will provide small plates of sweets and savory fare, as well as wine and Edison beer for purchase to benefit the HSO. Table seating adds to the festive ambiance.

In his Pops programming, Music Director Jin Kim follows the Viennese Pops tradition that was so successfully modeled by Boston Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler: sharing time-tested lighter classics by composers like Mozart, Strauss, Mendelssohn, and Dvorak. Plus, in keeping with an HSO tradition, one generous bidder from the audience will conduct the full orchestra in a rousing finale, Sousa's Stars and Stripes Forever.

The HSO is better than ever this season, according to music director Jin Kim. "The overall musicianship continues to reach new heights," says Kim. "We have attracted new, seasoned young professionals who are dedicated to their craft, plus we are developing more and more anchor musicians who become the musical core of the orchestra." As a testament to its level of musicianship, the HSO is proud to announce that its assistant concertmaster, Polina Sedukh, recently won a coveted position in the violin section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On Sunday, May 9 at 4 p.m. at Temple Sha'Aray Shalom in Hingham, the same concert will be performed as a benefit for Wellspring in Hull. Tickets for the benefit concert may be purchased directly from Wellspring.

Tickets at $30 for adults, $22 for seniors, and $10 for youth through age 18 are available in advance at La Petite Maison and Noble's in Hingham Square, Hingham and Weymouth Main Libraries, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, and Front Street Book Shop, Scituate, or call the box office at 781-740-5694 to reserve.

Cohasset hosts Rebif MS Walk

A five mile path starting and finishing at South Shore Community Center in Cohasset, is the rallying point for hundreds of South Shore residents as they take to the streets May 8, to fund the fight against multiple sclerosis. The Rebif MS Walk is a spring tradition, attracting more than 200,000 walkers at more than 700 sites nationwide, and raising more than $300,000 million. The Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society has organized the MS Walk since 1989. Each walker is encouraged to raise a minimum of $100, but most collect more than $200.

Individuals and corporate and family teams can register or volunteer to help online, www.msnewengland.org or by calling 1-800-493-Walk 9255), and in-person the day of the event.

MS is a chronic, autoimmune disease that affects the central nervous system, causing unpredictable symptoms including fatigue, paralysis, and blindness. Most commonly diagnosed between ages 20 and 50, MS affects women two to three times more often than men. In the US, more than 400,000 people have MS and 200 new cases are diagnosed each week. If you or someone you know has MS, contact the chapter, 1-800-493-9255, www.msnewengland.org

NO BEEPERS, NO CELL PHONES, NO WALKMANS, NO LAPTOPS, NO TV...

Many Summer Camps Becoming "Media Free Zones"

Here's What To Pack And What Not To Pack....

Summer camp is almost here, and with it comes the seemingly overwhelming task of packing clothes, mementos and must-haves. The American Camping Association of New England (ACA NE) suggests keeping packing simple and limited to what the camp recommends and what you feel your child will absolutely need.

At camp, children can be independent in ways they cannot be at home. If children do the packing (or at least help with the packing) they know what clothing and equipment choices they have and WHERE to find them! "When I was a camper, packing was one of the best parts for me. I enjoyed the independence of choosing what I was bringing, as well as knowing that I had everything I would need to make the experience safe and fun," says Bette Bussel, executive director, American Camping Association of New England.

Your child's Camp Director usually sends a packing list prior to camp. As a back-up, ACANE has put together the following general tips as you and your child prepare for the packing experience:

- DO NOT BRING beepers, cell phones, laptops, radios, televisions, portable CD players, walkmans (Check with your Camp Director as some camps allow small electronics)
- DO NOT BRING food or expensive clothes.
- DO NOT BRING any expensive item that cannot be replaced.
- Camps have different policies on whether or not it is appropriate to bring spending money.
- Remember, there is no need to buy a "camp" wardrobe. Clothes should simply be comfortable, yet durable. For uniformed camps some camps will provide the uniforms and others will tell you what to get. Check with your Camp Director.
- Shorts, t-shirts and jeans are staples of a camper's wardrobe and how many of these items a child will need depends on the length of stay and laundry facilities at the camp. More is not always better; pack the quantities of items the camp recommends.
- Use a permanent marker or nametags to write your child's name on every item.
- Be sure to pack long pants, as well as shorts. Campers need leg protection on hikes and during horseback rides.
- New shoes should be broken in and comfortable before leaving for camp.
- Don't forget a hat, raincoat or poncho.
- Other useful equipment includes a flashlight with extra batteries, a camera with film, a canteen or water bottle, pre-stamped and pre-addressed stationary, sunscreen, lip balm and insect repellent.
- Check with the camp for advice on weather patterns, suggested bedding (sheets, blankets, sleeping bags), as well as for any other specific gear needed for that camp.
- If your child takes medications, parents should send the medicine in the original bottle, along with dosage instructions.
- Campers might want to bring a tennis racquet, backpack, baseball/softball glove or instrument. Check to see if these things are allowed before packing them.

Take a walk on the wild side

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

Intermittent rainfall and momentary bursts of summertime warmth and sunshine have combined to transform our winter-weary landscapes into a multicolored portrait of ephemeral beauty. Each day, Mother Nature applies another brush stroke of color to her broad canvas of velvety green lawns and bright blue skies. Flowering trees, shrubs, and bulbs provide dazzling splashes of sunny yellow, rosy purple, luscious pink, and glistening white to this broadening palette, painting our spring landscapes with cheerful abandon.

This profusion of springtime blooms offers hope for the gradual recovery of our winter-damaged landscapes. Strolls through the gardens in recent weeks have been discouraging outings. Innumerable bare spots in the perennial borders, brittle brown stems on roses and hydrangeas, and crispy leaves on rhododendrons and hollies clearly indicate the severity of this past winter season. Slowly but surely, many apparent casualties are beginning to emerge, however, as new growth pushes its way up through the earth and tender new leaves sprout from seemingly lifeless branches. Patience is mandatory in the weeks to come. The resilience of plants is often remarkable but poking and prodding for signs of revival may damage soft new shoots, further weakening struggling plants.

Despite the lethargic appearance of many perennial plants, a number of early bloomers are providing a glorious display. Spring-flowering bulbs seem undaunted by the cold winter and offer a succession of bloom from March through May beginning with the cheerful, colorful chalices of species crocuses and culminating in the elegant long-stemmed goblets of multicolored tulips.

Woodland wildflowers are beginning to join the floral fanfare hastening to take advantage of the sun's light and warmth before the trees fully leaf out. Alongside my fishpond, stunning patches of double bloodroots (Sanguinaria multiplex) exhibit dozens of pristine white blossoms that resemble miniature water lilies. Yellow trout lilies (Erythronium americanum) have naturalized in a damp shady nook to form an expansive colony of glossy marbled leaves that form a perfect backdrop for their waxy sulfur-yellow blooms. Nearby, a carpet of wood anemones displays feathery foliage topped by tiny snow-white blossoms. The slender stems of variegated merrybells (Uvularia) surround a rocky outcropping intermingled with delicate pale orange sprays of barrenwort (Epimdedium).

These woodland treasures remind me of my childhood home in the Catskill Mountains. In recent years, when I wish to recapture these fond memories of my carefree youth, I journey to the Garden in the Woods in Framingham to wander the peaceful trails of the New England Wildflower Society's botanical garden. Enchanting in all seasons, the month of May is perhaps the loveliest time of all to plan a visit to this 45 acre paradise and roam the rambling trails along woodland streams lined with delicate mosses and aristocratic ferns and forest floors carpeted with exquisite lady's slippers. In addition to the serene woodland setting, there is a lily pond, a sunny bog, pine barrens, rock gardens, a meadow and a Western garden. The flora of temperate North America are featured in extensive gardens and naturalistic plantings nestled in among rolling hills, babbling brooks and peaceful ponds. Many rare and endangered species are grown, studied and preserved.

Spring-flowering bulbs seem undaunted by the cold winter and offer a succession of bloom from March through May beginning with the cheerful, colorful chalices of species crocuses and culminating in the elegant long-stemmed goblets of multicolored tulips.

A stroll through these charming woodland groves in May reveals large clumps of Virginia Bluebells (Mertensia) with nodding clusters of pink and blue blooms accompanied by sunny yellow Celandine poppies, delicately tinted, shell-pink azaleas and several species of trillium. Colonies of May Apples display their large, mottled, umbrella-like leaves atop 12-inch stems with a solitary, waxy white flower which will eventually produce an edible, lemon-like fruit. The fleeting blossoms of bloodroots, cradled by pale green, lobed leaves, appear here and there, interspersed with epimediums, whose airy sprays of cherry-red blooms dance upon wiry, arched stems amid broad carpets of handsome foliage.

A personal favorite is a little gem known as Dutchman's Breeches (Dicentra cucullaria). As described in the Peterson Guide to Wildflowers, this charming member of the bleeding heart family displays "a delicate spray of waxy, yellow-tipped flowers drooping in a row from an arched stem. Each flower has two inflated spurs that suggest the legs of tiny pantaloons, ankles up." Equally enchanting are the unique flowers of the pink lady's-slippers, familiar to every gardener, with their pouch-like blooms atop rigid stems rising from two large, oval, basal leaves.

A path leads from the woodland garden past a picturesque pond surrounded by moisture-loving plants. Innumerable clumps of irresistible, woolly fiddleheads will gradually unfurl to produce the broad, dramatic, stately fronds of the interrupted fern as the season progresses. Cheerful, brightly colored marsh marigolds, often known as cowslips, dot the edge of the wet areas with mounds of shiny green, heart-shaped leaves and showy yellow blooms resembling buttercups.

Many of these woodland wildflowers can be grown successfully in our shady backyard gardens if given the proper soil conditions. A fluffy, woodsy soil, mildly acid, with high humus content, will suit many of these woodland treasures. Filtered sunlight through deciduous trees or early morning sun followed by afternoon shade tends to be ideal for many shade-loving plants to encourage flowering. Supplemental moisture may be required, particularly during periods of drought, to ensure the survival of plants that prefer damp conditions.

Be sure to visit Garden in the Woods 180 Hemenway Rd, Framingham (newfs.org) to partake of its magnificent floral display, educational courses, workshops and programs, gift shop, and field trips. A spectacular plant sale of nursery-propagated wildflowers, garden perennials and shrubs is scheduled for Saturday, June 12.

Artwork sought for gardening handbook

Do you have art that you painted and would love to see on the cover of a gardening book? Or were you inspired by a walk in the woods and sat down and sketched your impressions that day? Or watched your children playing in the windrows of leaves in the fall and thought how much you would love to capture those moments on paper?

The work of amateur and professional artists alike are being eagerly sought for the cover and inside pages of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset's first gardening handbook. The copy is well underway and being written by the club's very accomplished gardeners, cooks, flower arrangers, horticulturists, landscapers, and naturalists, who are delighted to be sharing their knowledge with everyone. The book will also include poetry, helpful hints gleaned from years of experience, and endless gardening wisdom.

The club would love to have you share your artistic impressions of flowers, gardening and the outdoor world on the pages and cover of the book as well. The entries will be exhibited at the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum during the club's Standard Flower Show at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library May 12 and 13. The handbook committee will select the winners. The artist whose work is chosen for the cover will receive a $100.00 prize. Please call (781) 383-2486 for an entry form and guidelines as soon as possible. May 12 is almost here!

Those of you who are not artists circle your calendar for May 12 and 13, too. This is your opportunity to spend a delightful time visiting the flower show in the library, and the art exhibit and flower show boutique in the museum. There you will be able to satisfy your urge for plant material for your garden, enter a bid in a very special silent auction or bring a taste treat home for your family from the bake sale. This will be a family affair with activities for children who want to have their faces painted and to express their artistic talent through drawing. See you there!

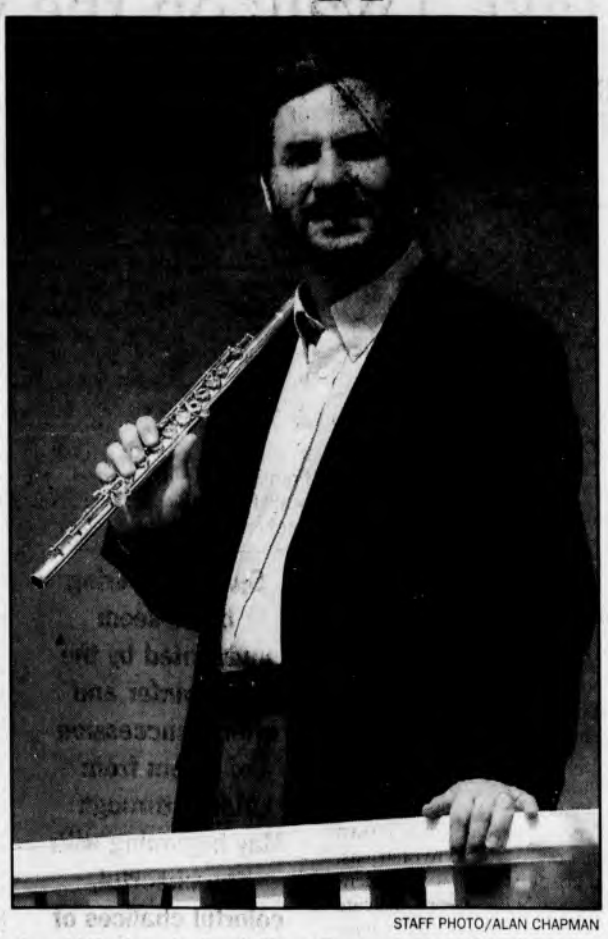
'Literary License' flower show at library

On Wednesday, May 12, and Thursday, May 13, from noon to 5 p.m. the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold a "Standard Flower Show" at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road. The show is open to the public. Admission is free.

Held every other year, the theme of this year's flower show is "Literary License" due to the fact that it will be held at Cohasset◊s new library.

There will be three divisions: Special exhibits, Horticulture, and Design; including a minimum of five horticulture classifications with at least 20 exhibits overall; and a minimum of three design classifications with at least four entries required in each classification.

A Standard Flower Show is the official name for a flower show conforming to standards established by the National Garden Clubs, Inc., (NGC). It must meet all requirements of NGC including a written schedule‹the program describing what the NGC wants the flower show to include. The exhibits are judged and ribbons are awarded by a panel of three NGC accredited judges working under rules of the Standard System of Awarding.



Although a Standard Flower Show must follow rules, it is a fun effort for club members who exhibit and compete, as well as share their expertise and enjoyment of flowers with the community. In anticipation of this year's show and as a learning experience over the past two years, club members have been attending monthly flower design workshops and holding mini-flower shows.

Full scale preparation for this year's show began in May of 2003 when club members Vivian Bobo and Nancy Gilmore began writing the schedule and deciding on a theme. Club President Sally Avery appointed Maureen Byrne as General Chairman and committee heads were chosen. Nonetheless, the entire club participates as exhibitors, hostesses, clerks, staging, dismantling, cleanup, and refreshments.

Norwell flutist releases first solo album

Donald Zook at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham.

It was 10 years "in the thinking" and two years in the making, but Norwell resident and musician Donald Zook has finally done it — he has released his first solo album.

Zook, a flutist, said his new CD, titled "Last Rose of Summer," was released earlier this month.

"I've played on a lot of other people's albums," Zook said, "but I've never released my own. I wanted to have my own style represented and I wanted to do a Romantic-era CD, a mosaic of the 17th Century. With this first CD, I wanted to let it all hang out. I wanted to say, 'This is me.'"

The CD consists of nine classical tracks featuring his flute, along with Steven Young on piano. Zook said all the compositions on the album are traditional classical pieces, not originals.

He said he feels it's important to highlight classical music, as he feels it's an art form that's disappearing.

"There has been a dropping-off in classical music in general," he said. "It just doesn't sell anymore. There's no message with this CD, it's just that I want to have my own work represented, like an artist painting."

While recording music has kept him busy, Zook stays active as it is. He is the head of the woodwind department at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham and Duxbury and also teaches flute at Bridgewater State College and Eastern Nazarene College.

Zook is also the founder, musical director and conductor of one of the largest flute symphonies in the United States, the South Shore Conservatory Flute Symphony. He has also appeared as a soloist and in chamber ensembles throughout the East Coast and Midwest.

Zook said it took two years to get the CD out because of all the recording, editing and graphic design involved in the overall process. Since he was working 60-hour weeks as it was, recording was something that took some time.

He said he believes anyone not familiar with classical pieces such as "Rimembranze Napoletane" by Giovanni Paggi and "Sixieme Solo de Concert, op. 82" by Jules Demersseman will be opened up to a whole new sound.

"I want people who listen to this CD to realize how beautiful and ornate the music of the Romantic era was," he said. "Look at the building of that era, everything was just so detailed. The music of that time was also very detailed. Nothing was done on a small scale."

He said while some may think it tough to put together a classical album with just flute and piano, Zook said all the songs on the album were written for those two particular instruments. And while Zook noted the pieces on the album are all traditional, he said sometimes he was forced to rearrange parts of songs if he felt they didn't work.

"Musicians adapt," he said.

Zook said the neat part about classical music is that virtually every piece tells a story, noting the program notes on his new CD "lead" the listener as they experience the music on the album.

"Every piece has a different thing to listen for," he said. "With these compositions, I'm trying to set moods. It's not background music or anything. I guess the more you know about classical music, the more you can enjoy it."

Zook said he hasn't had much feedback on his new album yet, as it just came out. He said he has played it for a few friends, his wife, Laura, his mother and his children, Nathan and Joshua.

"One of my friends told me that he loved it and said the songs on the album were ones you can't find anywhere anymore," he said. "I didn't play it for many people while I was recording it, I kept it kind of hush-hush. I wanted people to hear the whole CD, not just parts of it."

He added one of the reasons the CD sounds so good is because of album engineer Jeff Largent. He explained Largent, along with Young and himself, were quite critical as the album was recorded.

"We were all pretty critical as we went along," he said. "So many times we'd try something again. We were all very encouraging of one another, but it was important to be critical."

Zook said it was about two years ago that he approached Young about playing on the album. The two had done several concerts together, but Young enjoyed playing live more than recording in the studio.

"He finally agreed to do it though," Zook said. "We started the long process of rehearsing and finally, our last recording session was last Christmas."

With the new CD finally complete, Zook said he is already planning a second album. He said the tracks on that record will represent "music from Baroque to contemporary classical" and will be titled, "One on One."

"That album will be all unaccompanied," he said.

Zook said his love of flute and recording music started when he was about 14 years old. Growing up in inner-Chicago, his father was always playing classical music albums.

"My dad really opened that form of music up to me," he said. As he started playing the flute more and more, Zook said he eventually joined his high school band, which was number-one in the state "year after year."

"It got to the point where you couldn't stop me from playing the flute," he said. "For me, the flute was always my favorite because of the sound. The instrument always spoke to me. It's a very expressive instrument. You could get a dark sound, a hollow sound or a brilliant sound. I knew I'd be able to express myself with an instrument like that."

Zook said his brother, who played the clarinet, always pushed him as a musician.

"I'd tell any young musician the same thing — if you're frustrated with the instrument you're trying to learn, try another one," he said. "There are so many different instruments out there. Find recordings, go to concerts, read music magazines, the inspiration is out there."

While Zook said he will always love playing live, as he does so much around this area, he is now very partial to recording his own music and is looking forward to starting work on his second solo album.

"Recording is nice," he said. "With concerts, you play, everyone claps and it's over. I love the idea of recording something that will last long after I play my last note."

To get Zook's new album call (781) 826-5044 or e-mail him at don.zook@verizon.com. The album is $18. For those who want to see him in concert, Zook will be playing at the Thayer Public Library in Braintree on April 18 at 3 p.m. For more information on that show call (781) 848-0405.

CMS Summer Institute projects/workshops

This is the sixth Summer Institute offered by Cohasset Middle High School teachers. Summer Institute students engage in authentic, environmental research projects that have been identified as problems requiring scientific study. Working in collaboration with community groups, town officials, and government agencies, Summer Institute students are given opportunities to contribute to solving real environmental problems in our watershed. As a result, Summer Institute research projects have played a role in helping three Cohasset seniors win a prestigious Henry David Thoreau Scholarship in each of the last three years.

This season, the Summer Institute will be offered through Cohasset's Center for Student Coastal Research.

Frequently asked questions about Summer Institute research projects

Who is eligible to participate in Summer Institute Research projects? Students who will be in grades 9, 10, 11, or 12 by September, 2004 are eligible to participate in Summer Institute research projects.

What research projects are offered this summer? There are four research projects offered this summer.

Gulf River and Cohasset Harbor Field Study and Research Project (Project teacher: Dr. Thomae) The Gulf River study is geared to assist the Gulf Association assess the health of its river; it is supported by the Gulf Association and the Center for Student Coastal Research. Additional funding is currently sought through the award of an Environmental Education grant from the EPA. The Gulf River team will also continue Harbor analysis, compiling data for the fourth consecutive summer.

Micro Bacteriological Field Study_(Project teachers: Mr. Buckley, Ms. McGrail) There are several water bodies in Cohasset that seem to be polluted due to bacteria contamination. This is an opportunity to investigate any number of these water bodies. New technology in monitoring enterococci bacteria will be available this summer at CSCR, thanks to a grant from the Lighthouse Keepers Corporation. In addition to monitoring for enterococci, students will continue to assess fecal coliform levels in various bodies of water, as this remains the standard measure for recreational waters in the state of Massachusetts._

Author speaks on church scandal at VOTF event

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

The slogan of the Voice of the Faithful is a simple yet meaningful one — "Keep the faith. Change the church."

One man who may be helping to do just that — former Newsweek Senior Editor David France — is coming to the South Shore to speak about his new book "Our Fathers: The Secret Life of the Catholic Church in the Age of Scandal." France's book discusses the issue of sexual abuse by priests, its victims, and the ramifications for today's Catholics.

On Thursday, April 29, the Scituate and Weymouth affiliates of the Voice of the Faithful will host an evening with France at Weymouth's St. Albert the Great Catholic Church from 7 - 9 p.m.

In the book, which was recently featured in programs on National Public Radio, Nightline and The O'Reilly Factor, France discusses the interviews he conducted with those on all sides of the issue, victims, their families and their attorneys, innocent priests and guilty predators. In the work, he also addresses the cause of the crisis, which he speculates may have been fostered by the church's seminary culture of the 1950s.

Interviewed earlier this week, France discussed Our Fathers and his upcoming South Shore visit.

"My goal in this book was to listen carefully to everybody's voices, from whatever side of this awful history they represented, and try to convey their realities faithfully and without judgement."

"I felt that by combining their stories could I yield the larger truth of what happened inside the church," he added.

"My goal in this book was to listen carefully to everybody's voices, from whatever side of this awful history they represented, and try to convey their realities faithfully and without judgement."
— David France, author

Among those interviewed, France said he spoke with many who have maintained a strong faith in God, yet want changes to take place in their church.

"They have conveyed to me not only their deep love for the Church, but also a faith-based desire to address present shortcomings associated with institutional structure," he said.

During his current cross-country book tour, France said the response he's received from readers has been "overwhelming." Many attendees, he added, have approached him during the events and related their own stories of how the issue has personally affected them.

"To a man or woman, everybody wants the truth to be out," France said. "Our Fathers" is the tip of an iceberg. I only wish I could have told all of the details of what it has been like to be a Catholic in America in the past 50 years. But no book would hold so many unique stories."

After reading "Our Fathers," Dee Schmid, the facilitator of the Scituate affiliate of the Voice of the Faithful commented that the author certainly did his research.

"David France has some good ideas for solutions to some of these problems," she said. "One of them is to get the truth out on the table."

Although some of France's findings were indeed troubling, Schmid said it's necessary they be revealed in order that the church may heal.

For Schmid, the crisis in the Catholic Church is very real because two priests who served in the parish she grew up attending, have since been accused of sexually abusing children.

"The frustrating part," she added, "is there's no channel to go through to get to our bishops and be heard."

Schmid said, however, she doesn't want people to be entirely depressed and lose heart due to the current state of the Catholic Church.

"If we can face this honestly, handle it, we can then go forward," she said.

Scituate's Kathy Cerruti, a lifelong Catholic who helped organize the Scituate's Voice of the Faithful affiliate and organized France's visit said she wanted to get involved because she was appalled at what was going on in the church.

"The news was so dire," she said. "I had to be part of the solution."

Cerruti, who formerly attended Mass at St. Mary of the Nativity, but now attends Glastonbury Abby in Hingham, said the daily news headlines about the abuse cases caused her to deeply question 'How can I remain a Catholic and not do something positive or proactive about this?"

In September of 2002, Cerruti and Scituate's Beth Sullivan organized the affiliate's first meeting at the Foyer of Charity, and the small group — which consists of Catholics from St. Mary of the Nativity, St. Frances Cabrini, and Glastonbury Abbey of Hingham — has been meeting once a month ever since.

Cerruti said Voice of the Faithful members want to lend support to priests who have integrity, but are calling for transparency in the church.

"The group is demanding accountability," she added.

Last spring, the Scituate group hosted a talk by St. Albert's priest Ron Coyne, who discussed the experiences he's had as a priest, as a Christian, and in dealing with representatives from the Voice of the Faithful.

Approximately 150 people attended the discussion to hear Coyne, who Cerruti said is a very popular priest.

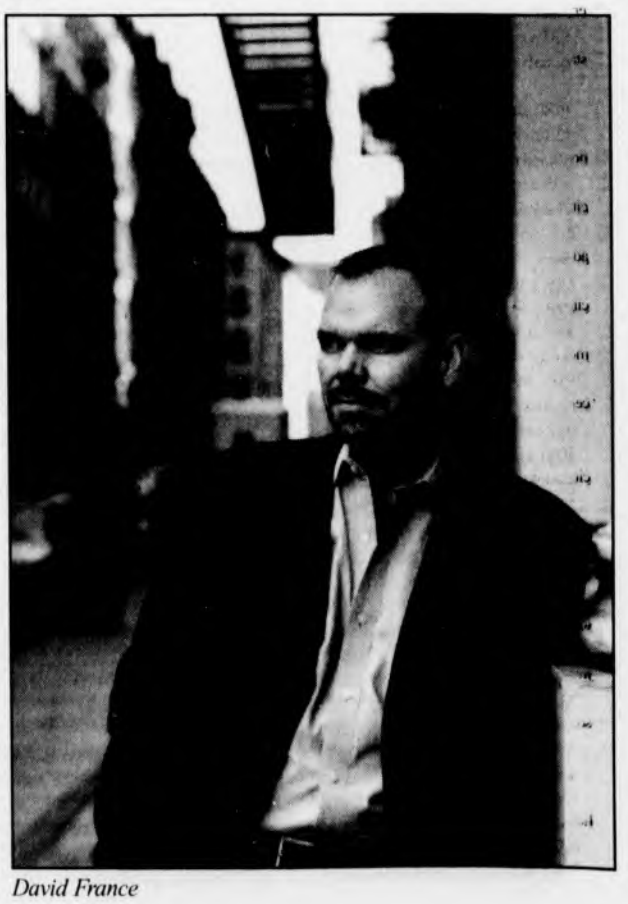
"That's huge for Scituate," she said.

Last November, approximately 65 people attended a talk by Ann Carroll and John Hynes, respectively the Voice of the Faithful's Vice President and the organization's regional coordinator for the South Shore, at the Jenkins Elementary School.

Cerruti said the group currently maintains 30-40 "die-hard" Catholics on its newsletter list, but only 15 showed up at their last meeting.

"Scituate is a tough sell," she added.

Cerutti said the Scituate affiliate maintains a good relationship with Scituate pastors — members have met with St. Mary of the Nativity pastor Brian Manning, while St. Frances pastor Paul McDonald has attended some of their events. But due to an edict issued by the former leader of the Boston Archdiocese — Cardinal Bernard Law — groups formed after Oct. 18, 2002, can not meet on church property.



The Scituate affiliate did not officially form until the following month.

A member of St. Mary of the Nativity, Schmid said she wishes the edict would be revoked so the Scituate group could host its meetings at the church's brand new parish center.

The Voice of the Faithful was founded in Wellesley with goals of supporting victims of abuse, supporting priests of integrity, and shaping structural change in the church.

What began as a small group of 25 Catholics west of Boston, has grown quickly and now numbers more than 30,000 members spanning the globe.

Free wellness night for the community

The Caring Connection program at St. Paul's Parish is hosting a free community lecture discussing therapeutic holistic care. The Caring Connection, a community outreach ministry program to the elderly and disabled invites Hingham residents and other residents from the South Shore Community to learn about complementary care. This is a terrific opportunity for ill or healthy people to educate themselves on healthcare and healing beyond the Western healthcare model. Learn about how acupuncture, chiropractic care, homeopathic care, massage therapy, Reiki and much more can aid you in a healthy and healing way. These therapeutic modalities will help people not only deal with a particular illness or chronic pain, but also help them integrate a holistic approach to their well being.

The "Wellness Ways" night will be held on Thursday, May 13, from 7 to 9 p.m. in the St. Paul's School Gymnasium on 20 Fearing Road. "I am so pleased to help coordinate this event for the community. More than seven years ago, I suffered from a life threatening illness and my journey back to health involved my own personal learnings of holistic care. It is exciting to bring these modalities together for the community so that they can learn about complementary care in one night," said Karen Lohnes, Harmony^2, The Mind/Body Connection.

Statistics show that over 75 percent of illnesses are caused by stress. There are resources for everyone out there to learn healthy ways to deal with stress, pain and illness. The conventional treatments in the complementary modalities usually focus on a "whole body" approach dealing with the symptoms and the mind and body connection with these illnesses. If you are looking to increase vitality, reduce pain and promote your well being come to "Wellness Ways" on Thursday, May 13, at St. Paul's Gymnasium for an education in holistic care that could change your life.

1058th unit is back from Iraq

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

April 23, 2004 will long be a date the soldiers of the 1058th will remember.

That was the day they returned to Hingham after about 14 months on the front lines of a war on the other side of the world to a homecoming that warmed their hearts and brought tears to their eyes.

"It's the most amazing feeling I've ever had," said Army SPC Sven West, 26, of Medfield after seeing the crowd assembled on Central Street and then being hugged by his parents, Roly and Kirsten West. "It's been a long year."

Armed with American flags, posters, balloons and infectious enthusiasm, a crowd of more than 2,000 family members and local residents gathered outside the Hingham Armory on Central Street to provide a huge welcome home for the 136-member 1058th Transportation Company of the Massachusetts Army National Guard which returned from Iraq. Initially the unit was responsible for the transport of supplies and troops operating between Kuwait and Iraq for the 1st Armor Division and the 3rd Infantry Division. From last June through March, the 1058th supported the 4th Infantry Division in Tikrit.

At 9 a.m. Friday, the troops boarded four buses at Ft. Drum, N.Y. — where they were "out-processed" since arriving back in the U.S.A. on Patriots Day — for the six-hour ride to Hingham. The trip stretched into about 7-1/2 hours thanks in part to a stop at McDonald's in New York that temporarily overwhelmed the fast-food restaurant, according to Marty Meislin of Pumpkin Coach Lines, who joked he wished he'd installed GPS (Global Positioning System) units in his buses. For hours, Meislin happily fielded calls from the press and police about the exact whereabouts of the buses and their ETA (estimated time of arrival).

The buses were expected by 3 p.m. but didn't arrive until 4:30 p.m. But rather than complain about the delay the crowd grew even more exhilarated with anticipation. Marion White, who heads the 1058th family support group, helped provide updates through cell phone calls to her daughter, SPC Kathleen White.

White did not need a microphone to announce the unit's progress. Close to 15 months without her daughter and a ton of pent-up excitement for the homecoming provided her vocal chords with extra power.

The crowd loudly cheered the news the buses were 20 minutes outside Framingham; had just left the Mass Pike; were at Home Depot in Rockland, and then at Queen Ann's Corner.

Employees and customers at Home Depot stood along the guardrail to wave to the troops as they came down the Rte. 3 exit ramp. Two soldiers, SPC Robert Stockbridge and SPC William Chiano worked at the store before being deployed. A huge banner on the building also heralded their arrival.

By 2:30 p.m. Hingham's Main Street was lined with scattered gatherings of people. The street was decorated with yellow ribbons and there was a sign on each pole depicting an army truck. Each sign had the name of a different soldier and the words "Great Job, 1058th." The forsythia, which matched all the yellow ribbons, had bloomed just in time and brightened the overcast day.

One Desert Storm veteran at the corner of Arnold Road and Main Street took the flagpole from his house and sang "America the Beautiful" as the buses passed by.

The State Police, and the Hingham police and fire departments led the way as the buses drew closer to the Armory.

At the Armory, individual families — some of whom numbered more than a dozen each — outdid themselves with an assemblage of posters, T-shirts, balloons, flowers and vocal cheers for their soldier and the entire 1058th.

For sisters, Lucille Walsh and Denise Sweeney of South Boston, who each sported red, white and blue head bands with bouncing stars, being reunited their youngest sibling, Michael Cavanaugh, 41, would be bittersweet. The family, who number 15 children in all, lost two brothers from heart attacks within seven weeks of each other during the past year.

Daniel Santiago came all the way from California to be there when his brother SPC Joel Santiago, 24, of Lawrence, stepped off the bus. "I'm so relieved," Daniel said "I can't wait to see him."

Helen Jablonski and Lena Gullins of Quincy – both grandmothers of SPC Craig Jablonksi, 24 — wore T-shirts with their grandson's photograph.

"He's the best," said Helen Jablonski, adding she never erased a voice mail message that her grandson left while he was Ft. Drum last February before being deployed.

Not everyone at the scene had a family member in the 1058th. World War II and Korean War veteran Bob Beal of Hingham said he was grateful there were no casualties and the entire unit was back in tact.

Wearing a jacket with an American flag design, Helga Jorgensen of Hingham said she was weeping through the entire event. But her tears were those of joy and pride. A naturalized citizen, Jorgensen is proud of be American. "We come that way," she said about those who adopt the USA.

Jorgensen wasn't the only one wiping away tears. Sue Marchioni of Hingham along with her children and a small army of moms and kids from the O'Connor, Page and Moross families — turned out in force with "welcome home" posters of their own and plenty of Kleenex. Marchioni said she was touched by all the messages on the posters from 1058th families about brothers, mothers, fathers, nephews, grandsons and more.

Desert Storm veteran Coleman Nee of Cohasset came to show his support, as did Mary Beth Kuhn of Norwell and her children Johnny, 6 and Emily, 8. The Kuhn kids held a poster that simply said "Thank You." Kuhn said her husband, Petty Officer 1st Class John Kuhn, serves in homeland security with the U.S. Coast Guard. "We are very lucky he gets to stay home – these folks had to leave their families," she said.

SPC Paul Loring gets interviewed by Channel 5 as he steps off the bus at the Hingham Armory last Friday.

The buses and their entourage that included Hingham's Quint One (aerial ladder truck) arrived at precisely 4:37 p.m. to sirens sounding and flags waving from the crowd that also included a large contingent of local Cub Scouts.

SPC Charles Grillo, 29, of West Roxbury said the greeting was really special.

"I can't believe I'm home," Grillo said, saying how all the people in the crowd waving flags impressed him. "We couldn't hang American flags in Iraq — that's one of the things I missed most — not seeing the American flag."

Sgt. James Hester, 58, of Roslindale said he was the oldest soldier in the unit.

"It is great to be home," he said. "And this welcome is just what we needed after 15 months."

But Hester's thoughts were also with all the troops still in Iraq, some 135,000 men and women.

"My heart goes out to them," he said. "They have a tough task ahead. I wish them all the luck."

'Citizen soldiers' honored at Armory

Capt. Christine Hoffman, commander of the 1058th, said nothing during the unit's 15-1/2 month deployment to Iraq surprised her as much as Friday's hometown homecoming.

"The 1058th ruled Iraq but the State Police did an awesome job getting the vehicles out of the way," Hoffman said about the escort State Troopers provided along the Mass Pike, and routes 95 and 128. "On our arrival in Hingham it was incredible how many citizens were on the streets waiting for us." She said the 1058th felt Hingham welcomed them back with open arms. She also thanked the Hingham police and fire departments for their escort through town.

Hoffman's remarks were part of a recognition ceremony Tuesday at the Hingham Armory for the soldiers and their families.

The current 1058th Transportation Company of the Massachusetts Army National Guard followed a long tradition of service in the nation's wars. The unit served in World War I, World War II, Desert Storm and the current Iraq war. Over the past 15 months in Iraq, the unit provided more than 8,500 escorts traveling more than one million miles in some of the most dangerous conditions.

Selectman Melissa Tully said it was an honor for her to represent the 20,000 residents of Hingham in welcoming the 1058th home. She said although most of the soldiers don't live in town, the 1058th is an important part of the community. "You have been in our hearts and minds the whole time," she said.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who also spoke when the unit returned from the first Gulf War, said it was an honor for him to speak at the ceremony concluding another chapter in the unit's long, storied history.

"For many of us the 15-1/2 months went by quickly," Hedlund said. "But not for the guys and gals in the 1058th.

"During the send off a year ago February, I recall asking for God's blessing to watch over the unit and apparently that occurred because the 1058th came back without casualties or injuries," he said.

US Navy Lt. Commander Ted LeClair of Scituate, a friend of state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, spoke for the representative who was unable to attend due to budget deliberations at the State House.

"Some have questioned our national character in recent years, wondering if we are still the same people who persevered through two centuries marked by war and hardship," said LeClair. "During the past 15 months, the 1058th and your families have answered that question."

Maj. Gen. George W. Keefe, the Adjutant General of the Massachusetts National Guard, said the country owed the 1058th a debt of gratitude.

"As Americans we owe you, our soldiers and veterans, for all you've done to make the world a safer place," he said.

The unit will be on leave for 90 days. Keefe told the soldiers to enjoy the break. "If I catch any of you in uniform or at the armory, I'll personally come down and throw you out," he quipped.

During an interview before the reception got underway, Capt. Winfield Danielson, spokesman for the Massachusetts National Guard, explained after a 90-day leave, the unit would be back to drilling one weekend a month. He said it is very unlikely the unit would be deployed again to Iraq but not impossible.

"It is no one's preference from the National Guard all the way to the Department of Defense, and would be a last resort," Danielson said. "But war is not a certain thing and we can't make that promise."

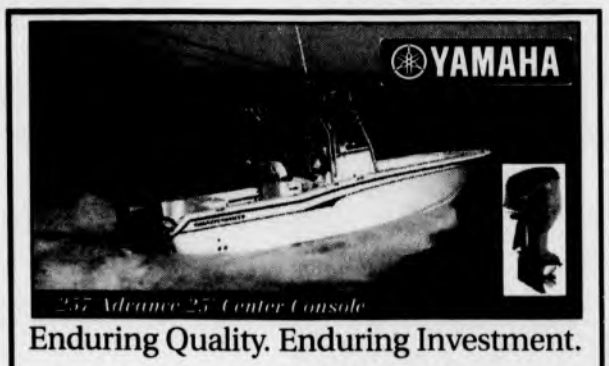
Dinner Theater producer John F. McDonald, Jr. wasted no time recasting his show with performer Steve Marvin for what will now be "Two Gals & A Guy."

"We're very lucky to get Steve," explains John F. McDonald, Jr. of JM Productions. "He has a wonderful voice. And, by adding Steve to our line-up, we will also be able to feature the music of Frank Sinatra." Originally from Roxbury, Marvin started his career as a drummer. He is now better-known as a singer whose recent series of concerts celebrating Frank Sinatra have been performed at New York's Town Hall and Lincoln Center.

Carol O'Shaughnessy has long been known as "Boston's First Lady of Cabaret," earning frequent Entertainer of the Year honors for her appearances at Jordan Hall, Sculler's, and Club Cabaret. Jan Peters is a Eugene O'Neill Cabaret Symposium Fellow whose vocal stylings have been heard at Sculler's, Club Cafe, and The Lyric Stage.



"Two Gals & A Guy" will be presented by JM Productions Dinner Theater at Raffael's Restaurant, One Enterprise Drive, North Quincy. For tickets and information, call 617/328-1600 or visit the Web site www.jmproductionspresents.com.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

WHEN BIGGER IS BETTER

With all the emphasis on miniaturization, the benefits of a larger behind-the-ear (BTE) hearing instrument should not be overlooked. This type of hearing instrument consists of a plastic case, which houses the electronics and is positioned behind the ear, linked by tubing to a soft custom earmold. While BTE instruments are suitable for any age, the replaceable earmold can accommodate growing ears, making BTEs particularly suitable for children. This type of instrument is also durable and easy to handle, which furthers its suitability for children. They take larger batteries, which are more powerful and easier for seniors to handle. BTE instruments also provide the most amplification, making them better able to handle all types of hearing losses.

We believe an unaddressed hearing loss is more noticeable than a hearing aid, and we urge you to get help if your hearing isn't what it once was or should be. Our methods at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER include using the most sophisticated technology available today. This, coupled with the astonishing hearing aids now manufactured and our professionalism and personal attention to your needs, ensures your complete satisfaction with your hearing device. Come visit at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. Behind-the-ear hearing instruments can be modified with connections to external sound sources such as auditory training equipment and infrared listening systems.

Haddad era comes to an end at Town Hall

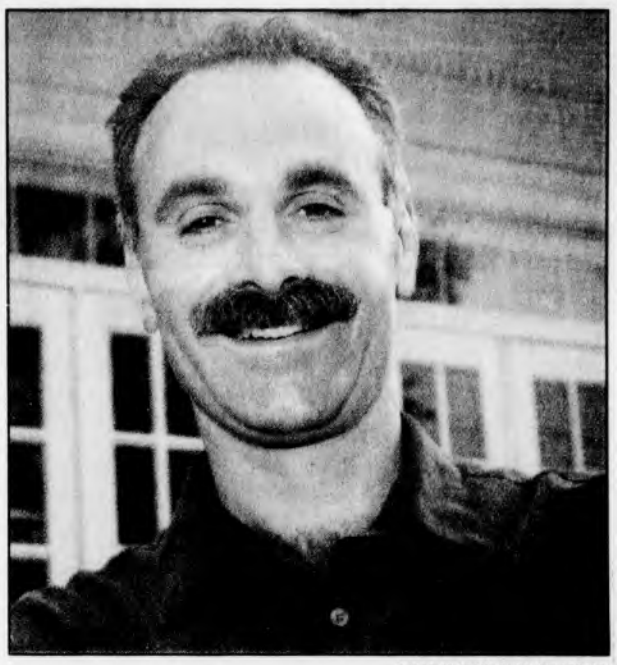
Abruptly resigns after 7 years

By Samantha Brown and Mary Ford
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In many towns the resignation of the Town Manager would draw little interest — but not in Cohasset, where Mark Haddad, at 6 feet, 3 inches tall and 215 lbs., was a figure almost bigger than life both literally and figuratively.

The first Town Manager in this town of 7,000 lasted nearly seven years at the post – outpacing early critics of the new form of government who speculated the first person to take the job would last only 18 months.

But now townspeople are referring to Haddad, who turned 40 this year, in the past tense. Haddad offered his abrupt resignation to the Board of Selectmen in a terse two-line letter yesterday which reads: "Kindly be advised that I am hereby resigning my position as Town Manager effective immediately. I thank you for giving me the opportunity to be of service to you and the residents of the Town of Cohasset."



Director of Finance Michael Buckley will be serving as Town Manager until a replacement can be found, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said.

Several town hall workers said they were "shocked" and "stunned" by the sudden resignation Wednesday. One described the mood at town hall as very quiet and somber.

Earlier this week, the news of Haddad's apparent departure spread like wildfire throughout town; the rumor mill churned. The Mariner received an avalanche of calls and emails, most saying "there's a story there." Some callers were more specific about the possible reasons for Haddad's exit but the information shared was hearsay and could not be verified for the record.

Selectmen are tight lipped on the issue but met in executive session to discuss "litigation and contract negotiations" for more than two hours Tuesday night, which dealt with Haddad's impending resignation. Tuesday's meeting followed an emergency selectmen's meeting Saturday at noon at Town Hall.

No promises

Sewer commission offers hope for possible hookups

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the Sewer Commission said homes on Deep Run, Rust Way, and Jerusalem Road, will receive consideration for town sewer connections before other proposed developments in town, the board said it can't make any promises capacity will be available by the time it can make that decision.

Because the town is under an obligation from the state to undertake a number of sewer projects to upgrade the sewer systems in critical areas of town, including the Little Harbor area, the board said planned hook-ups must come first, followed by a year or two of monitoring, and then if capacity exists, other hook-ups can be reviewed.

"These applications represent your intention to tie into sewer," said Sewer Commission Chairman Ray Kasperowicz to those applicants who attended the meeting, adding it makes sense geographically to consider the homes for a hook-up based on their being contiguous to Little Harbor.

Since the homes are in close proximity to Hull, the commission said looking to that town to buy capacity might be worth investigating into as well. "We can accept the applications and try to do what we can, but we can't make any promises," Kasperowicz said.

However, while the town is already using some sewer capacity it purchased from Hull, at roughly $3,000 per household for a 30-year period, asking for more may not be a viable alternative for a couple of reasons.

Jerusalem Road Estates, a proposed 25-home subdivision to be located across from Straits Pond, filed three applications with the Sewer Commission in 2002. The applications would have allowed the development to either:

• Use its own capacity in Hull, but install a private sewer force main some 2,000 feet eastward

'He defined what a friend should be'

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The old adage that "true friendship can be seen through the heart and not the eyes" could have been written for Justin Langham.

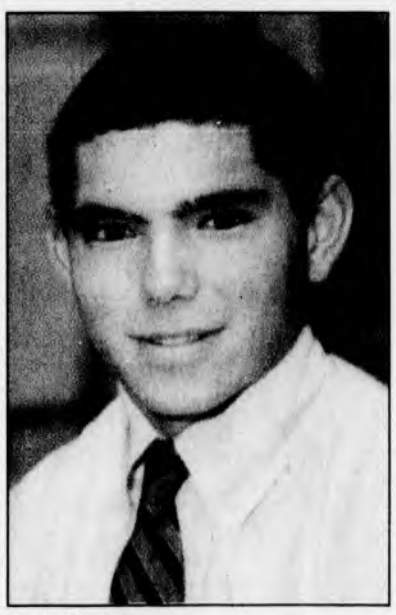
The 20-year-old college student, who was tragically killed last week in Scotland, left his mark on his many friends.

In fact, he has so many friends, it's difficult to single out who his best friends were.

"He was really friends with everyone, whether with the boys of the football team or those on the student council," says classmate Kelly Devine.

Described as bright, polite, fun-loving and incredibly kind, Langham was also a leader. As president of the Cohasset High School Class of 2001, he noted in his commencement address that the class had succeeded artistically, academically and athletically and "had fun doing it."

"No matter what, you could always rely on him. He had such a good heart. He was a great friend and a great person."
— Aryanna Afshar, classmate



Langham died Monday, April 26, in Glasgow, Scotland where he was attending the university there. He was on his way back to his dormitory at 9:30 a.m. when he was hit by a truck. He succumbed to his injuries at the scene.

His friends, teachers and coaches were shocked by the news. But this week their focus was on how Langham lived and the warm memories they will treasure.

A three-sport athlete, Langham was captain of the football, wrestling and lacrosse teams.

"He was a real leader," says CMHS Athletic Director Ron Ford, who recalls seeing Langham last fall before he went over to Scotland. "He was very excited

Getting physical with the Army National Guard

Exercises build self-confidence

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Physical strength and endurance is key for soldiers in the armed forces, and recruiters from the Massachusetts Army National Guard liked what they saw when they paid a visit to physical education classes at Cohasset Middle High School.

In an effort to spread the word to high school students about the benefits of joining the National Guard, including 100 percent free college tuition, recruiters have been making special promotional visits to local high schools, which are providing more than just information in the form of pamphlets and fliers. Alongside recruiters, students are completing real physical challenges, during physical education classes, which boost their self-esteem, giving them confidence whether they choose to sign up for the Guard or not.

SPC Raymond O'Donnell, a career counselor for the Army National Guard, met with students in Cohasset last week along with a team of National Guard recruiters. After recruiters conducted an army-style gym class, students were brought out-

Flushing of water mains continues

The Water Department is flushing water mains between April 26 and May 31. Flushing will take place on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m.. Flushing will continue on with the following schedule:

- May 5 – Jerusalem Road from Forest Street to Atlantic Avenue and all streets off this section of Jerusalem Road.
- May 10– Jerusalem Road from Forest Street to Atlantic Avenue and all streets off this section of Jerusalem Road.
- May 11 – Pond St. from Route 3A to the High School; Clay Spring Rd.; Reservior Rd.; Old Pasture Rd.; Tupelo Rd.; Bayberry Lane; Arrowwood Rd.; Evergreen La.; Pleasant St.; Sohier St. from Deer Hill School to Ripley Rd.; Smith Pl.; and Cushing Rd. from Smith Pl. to Norfolk Rd.
- May 12 – Pond St. from the High School to Spring St.; Woodland Rd.; Holly La.; Bancroft Rd.; Norfolk Rd.; Hill St.; Ash St.; Oak St.; Norfolk Ln.; Cushing Rd. from Norfolk Rd. to Spring St.; Virginia La.; Lantern La.; and Spring St.

Residents will be provided advance notification in the Patriot Ledger and Cohasset Mariner of the schedule for flushing each segment of the system. In addition, temporary street signs will be placed strategically around the affected area on the day of flushing. Notice will also be provided on the Water Dept.'s web site, www.cohassetwater.org and on the local cable access, Channel 10. Residents should monitor the web site and Channel 10 for schedule changes.

"Flushing cleans out sediment and deposits which may have accumulated in the water mains and is an important part of the continuing efforts to improve drinking water quality to our customers," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission.

Do not wash clothes during the time the flushing occurs. If clothing becomes stained it can be cleaned by using "Iron Out" which is available for free from the Water Department.

During the flushing program, some temporary discoloration of the water may occur. Run the cold water faucet, preferably outside, for a short time until the discoloration clears. If your water is discolored, avoid using hot water until you flush your hot water tank by opening the valve at the bottom of the tank.

Please call the Water Department at (781) 383-0057 with any questions.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Board of Health, May 18, 7 p.m.

Planning Board, May 19, 7 p.m.

Recreation Commission, May 11, 6 p.m.

School Committee, May 6, 7 p.m., high school library

Sewer Commission, May 7, noon

Water Commission, May 6, 7:30 p.m., Town Hall

All meetings are at Town Hall unless indicated otherwise. Call the Town Clerk at 781-383-4100 for updates.

Building permits

The following building permits were issued at Town Hall:

McNary, 355 Atlantic Ave., windows, doors, general repairs, $34,000; Signorelli, 285 No. Main St., re-roof 23 squares, $8,050; DeWaal, 431 So. Main St., remodel bath, add shed roof/windows, $7,500; Lighthouse Lane, tent 16 x 16, reception, $285; Yacht Club-Tedeschi, Howard Gleason Rd., tent 30 x 90, tent 30 x 30, $6,400; Willard, 37 Stockbridge St., wood stove, $4,000.

Household hazardous product collection

Cohasset will have a joint hazardous waste collection day with Hull from 9 a.m.-1p.m., June 5 at a location to be announced.

Accepted materials include solvents, gasoline, motor oil mixtures and other automotive fluids, pesticides, photography chemicals, pool chemicals, acids and bases, thermometers, thermostats and poisons. Materials not accepted include industrial waste, radioactive materials, pathological and medical waste, pressurized gas cylinders, auto batteries and explosives. Paint, motor oil, propane tanks, fluorescent lamps and NiCd (rechargeable) batteries are collected regularly by many towns and may not be accepted at some collections. Latex paint is nonhazardous, and may be dried and disposed with trash. Bring chemicals in their original containers or labeled clearly as to their contents. Clean Harbors will conduct the collections.

Residents who turn in a toxic mercury thermometer or other mercury item may swap it for a digital thermometer. Visitors' mercury waste may be disposed but not swapped. Swaps sponsored by American Ref-Fuel at SEMASS or Mass. DEP.

For more detailed information and directions, call the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318. Claire Sullivan, Solid Waste Planner.

Town will pay for teacher benefits

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said in the event $105,000 is raised to retain the positions of three teachers slated to be cut from the elementary school, the town will pay for their benefits. The town has always paid for benefits for both current and retired employees, and there is a budget set aside specifically to cover those costs. That budget has enough money to cover costs for inflation, which means there is enough money currently in the budget to cover the costs of the benefits for the three entry-level teachers as well as the retiring teachers they will replace, but only for one year. The cost of insurance for those three teachers will be roughly $30,000 for the year.

Maintenance Supt. to be hired by July 1

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said a new Supervisor of Building Maintenance will be hired by July1. Duties will include overseeing all aspects of maintenance of the town's facilities, including facility planning and construction and rehabilitation services. The person hired will also be the point person for fields, and will make the decision as to whether a field is in the proper condition to be played on. The job description that has been drafted for the position will be reviewed by Town Counsel before the position is advertised.

Sparks fly over streetscape plans

Village review committee named

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A new downtown revitalization review committee will be formally appointed, but it will be against the strong convictions of some Selectmen who think bringing the discussion back to the table is second-guessing a Town Meeting vote.

The committee, which is charged with reviewing plans already drafted by a design group hired by the town, was formed to investigate solutions for concerns expressed by members of the Planning Board, as well as some members of the Board of Selectmen, residents and merchants. The review committee has been meeting informally to take another look at the plans for the project, and feels with a 50-year project such as the village streetscape, the more eyes the better.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who did not vote in favor of appointing the committee, said the plans for the downtown project have been discussed at length over the past two years, and she doesn't see what purpose the committee is supposed to serve.

"I have to say I was a little bit surprised (to hear about the committee) given we had a vote of Town Meeting last fall that I thought addressed these issues," said McMorris. She added the decisions that have already been made on the project were decided by the town, and "it seems to me the group is here to override the Town Meeting vote."

However, Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who has been the driving force behind getting the committee started, said after bringing the plans to the Planning Board, it had some serious concerns that "were pretty much disregarded by Waterfield." The town hired the Waterfield Design Group to design the new streetscape as part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, which has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for by grants and private donations. The discussions surrounding the design of the Village streetscape have been going on for two and a half years.

Dormitzer said the three issues that are the most outstanding are the aesthetics of the plans, including using poured concrete for the sidewalks, which he said is "inappropriate in a small town"; the number of parking spaces that will ultimately be in the village; and the phasing of the project.

"Phasing is very different from the first two issues," said McMorris, and agreed that phasing is an issue that will need to be looked at once a contractor is hired. However, she said while she understands people might not be completely happy with the plans for the downtown area, they have been approved by the voters of the town, and it will set a very dangerous precedent if that vote is changed.

Selectman Rob Spofford said at this point, his major concern is the amount of money the town still has available to spend on design work. To date, the town has been reimbursed for $145,000 in design costs from grants. He said the town has also spent an additional $100,000 which it has not been reimbursed for as of yet, and another bill from Waterfield for an additional $50,000 was just received.

"I'm appalled, I have to say," that the town has spent $300,000 on design costs for a $1 million-plus project, said Spofford. "I'm not going to support another re-look if it's going to cost us more money. Three-hundred thousand dollars on a million dollar project is ridiculous."

While members of the review committee would not charge a fee for their examining the plans, anything that would be changed on the Waterfield Plans would cost money, and in terms of liability, they would have to approve the new design. Spofford said because of the money spent on design to date, he imagines the project will have to be scaled back if it's going to come in on budget.

Selectman Fred Koed said from the meetings he has attended, especially with the Planning Board, he has found the downtown business community is concerned with the current plans, and they are the ones that will be most affected by changes. "If they're concerned, I'm concerned," he said. In addition, he said there will be several business people and merchants on the committee, who will be able to take a look and maybe make recommendations that could help with the concerns of the village merchants.

Spofford reiterated any changes made to the plans will only cost the town more money.

Koed said he doesn't think it is a clear-cut issue as to whether voters at Town Meeting actually voted for concrete because of the cost associated with some other streetscape materials, or because they actually wanted the sidewalks made of concrete.

However, McMorris said, "To say we don't know why people voted the way they did is a dangerous precedent. We cannot set a precedent and say we're going to ignore that vote."

McMorris noted it is often impossible to draft a set of plans everyone will be happy with, but if the board decides to go against what was voted, "We might as well throw out Town Meeting altogether," because the votes that took place there wouldn't have mattered.

But Dormitzer said the article that was voted makes reference to a "concept" because at that time, there was not a firm set of plans in place for the streetscape. "This article was very vague," he said.

However, McMorris said she had worked for many hours with Town Manager Mark Haddad to draft the article and said it was written to address the two main issues of redoing the sidewalks and undergrounding the utilities. McMorris said there was a decision made, the voters decided against burying the wires and voted for concrete sidewalks, and while some were in the minority, those people who came to Town Meeting and cast their votes can't be ignored.

But Dormitzer said he felt the voices of the numerous people that signed petitions over the summer who wanted brick incorporated into the sidewalks and the streetscape redesigned were ignored.

McMorris said, "Those people should have come to Town Meeting to vote. That's the process and that's the way the town does things."

The nine-member board approved by a 3-2 vote includes Dormitzer, Spofford, George McGoldrick, Tom Hamilton, Jim Sandell, Wayne Sawchuk, David Chase, Amyra O'Connell, and Neil Murphy. Town Counsel will be looking at the list of charges drafted for the group, to make sure it doesn't conflict with any Town Meeting votes.

Other residents who are interested in participating and have related experience should contact Nicole in the Town Manager's office at (781) 383-4105.

Mutual aid credited with quick work on house fire

Rubble is piled outside 505A Jerusalem Road, the scene of a two-alarm fire Sunday.

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the mutual aid system with area towns played a critical role in bringing a house fire under control quickly Sunday afternoon.

"The Hull Fire Department was in there first," Lincoln said, about the working fire at 505A Jerusalem Road.

The civilian dispatch center at Cohasset Police Headquarters on Elm Street received a 9-1-1 call from a neighbor at 3:08 p.m., Sunday, who called after seeing flames and smoke. The homeowner was away at the time, Lincoln said.

"The kitchen sustained severe damage and the rest of the house had various degrees of heat and smoke damage," Lincoln said. There were no injuries and the family's pets — two dogs and a cat — escaped safely.

Lincoln explained when Hull firefighters arrived and saw the extent of the fire, they struck the second alarm, which calls for more manpower and apparatus.

In addition to Hull and Cohasset, Scituate helped at the scene and covered Cohasset fire headquarters.

"The fire was brought under control quickly and we ventilated the building of smoke on all floors," Lincoln said. " We also opened the ceiling and walls to see that the fire had not extended up and across."

Lincoln said the fire apparently started on the stovetop and appears to have been accidental. He said the house was not habitable due to extensive smoke damage and the homeowner, who came to the scene, was staying with relatives.

Cohasset sent all its apparatus to the fire and had a good turnout from off-duty and call firefighters, Lincoln said. About 25 firefighters were on the scene. All Cohasset paramedics are cross-trained as firefighters.

Lincoln said the house, which is a 2-1/2 story with four bedrooms, was fairly new or had been remodeled and met all building codes. He did not provide an estimate of damage saying he leaves that up to the insurance adjusters.

"I'm very happy that mutual aid allowed us to get this fire under control quickly," Lincoln said. "The firefighters all did a great job. I'm thankful that no one was injured."

The homeowner could not immediately be reached for comment.

FIRST RECITAL

On Sunday, May 2 at the Hingham High School Auditorium, Emily Moy and the dance school, Dance Steps, entertained us to a wonderful performance. This was Emily's first recital. She danced to the tune of "Hello Dolly"with her class of baby ballerinas. Dance Steps is taught and owned by Janet LeClair Campbell of Cohasset. The school just completed its 10th year of teaching young girls ballet and jazz dancing. Thank you Janet and every dancer in Dance Steps.

The playground is scheduled to be installed this June!

RELAY FOR LIFE

Hundreds of walkers go around the clock to fight cancer during the American Cancer Society Relay for Life. This celebration of life brings numerous groups and individuals concerned about cancer together for a unified effort to fight back. Teams of enthusiastic citizens will gather at Cohasset High School for an overnight relay against cancer from 3 p.m. on Friday, June 18 until noon on Saturday, June 19.

Relay For Life is a unique fundraising event that allows participants from all walks of life — including patients, families, civic organizations, businesses, churches, and community volunteers — to join together to fight cancer. Relay For Life reminds us that progress has been made in the fight against cancer and that everyone who participates is making a difference. Relay For Life opens as cancer survivors (anyone who has ever been diagnosed with cancer) walk or use a wheelchair to complete the Survivor's Lap during Opening Ceremonies on Friday at 6 p.m. This is an emotional time that sets the stage for the importance of each participant's contribution.

A festive atmosphere develops around the track. As walkers make new friends and spend time with old ones, the Relay heats up and the camp-out begins. An atmosphere of camaraderie is created with team members entertaining each other: eating, playing games, and, of course, walking for a great cause.

Highlighting the evening is the luminaria ceremony held after dark to honor cancer survivors and to remember those we have lost. The luminarias line the track and are left burning throughout the night to remind participants of the incredible importance of their contributions. Information about how to form a team or become involved in Relay For Life is available from the American Cancer Society at 1-800-ACS-2345, available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, or www.cancer.org.

CYBS CALENDAR

The Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Association is once again holding its Calendar Card fundraiser. Our baseball and softball players are all over town selling the calendar cards and helping to raise funds for the Little League. Last years efforts raised over $20,000 which was used to pay off the debt to the town for the new fields, as well as help purchase two new scoreboards, bleachers, and the building of the concession stand. This year's drawings begin on Thursday, May 13 and continue until June 13 with weekday drawings of $50, weekend drawings of $150 and a final grand prize drawing of $1000 at the All-Star game and cookout. We thank all of our players, parents, friends and families for helping to make this Calendar Card fundraiser another BIG success!!. Good luck!

SWIMMERS & DIVERS

Attention returning swimmers & divers: the 2004 season sign-up for returning swimmers and divers, to the Cohasset Swim & Dive Team, will be held on Saturday May 15 from 9a.m.-noon at the Cohasset Town Hall.

BC HIGH HONOR ROLL

Congratulations are in order for Patrick B. Flynn '07 of Cohasset who achieved honors for the third quarter at Boston College High School. For Honors a student must have at least a 3.20 quality point average. Keep up the hard work, Patrick.

WINE TASTING

For ladies who would like to know more about those trendy wines from "down under," Our World Children's Museum is holding a wine tasting May 14 from 7:30 to 10 p.m. at the museum, 100 Sohier St. Proceeds from the $45 tickets will go to the museum. Participating in the presentation will be Tim Fogarty from the House of Nobilo, New Zealand, and Tony Charley representing Banrock Station vineyards, Australia. Cohasset's own Amyra Chase from Village Wine and Spirits will also assist. There will be yummy hors d'oeuvres to eat and fabulous baskets of goodies to be raffled. Please send checks to Our World, PO Box 422, Cohasset, 02025 or call 781-383-3198 for reservations.

Building a bridge from Boston to Cohasset

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Crouched over beds of baby spinach, Cohasset Middle High School juniors Carlos Peralta and Miguel De Los Santos harvest one of the first crops of spring at Holly Hill Farm. As they talk and joke with each other in Spanish, they carefully select the leaves that will be delivered to area restaurants, as well as those they will take home.

Through a community service class at the high school, the two have been working on the organic farm on Jerusalem Road two and three times a week for all of second semester. But when the school day is done, the boys can sometimes be found putting in extra hours, which they say is their way of saying "Thanks" to the community.

Both Carlos and Miguel attend school in Cohasset through participation in the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, or METCO program. They are two of 50 students who commute to school in Cohasset every day. The program is intended to expand educational opportunities and reduce racial imbalance, by permitting students in certain cities to attend suburban public schools in participating communities. The two boys say they realize how lucky they are to have been chosen to take part in the program, and feel they are able to give back to the town through their contributions on the farm.

"The waiting list is really long," for students who would like to participate in the METCO program, said Carlos. Miguel added the two did get lucky in being able to come to Cohasset, because by the time some students get accepted, they have already given up.

Both boys began school in Cohasset in the eighth grade. Carlos lives in Dorchester and Miguel in Roxbury. While Carlos has his own car and drives himself to school in the morning, Miguel says he has to wake up at 5:45 to ensure he is ready when the bus comes to pick him up. "If I miss the bus, there is no other way and I don't go to school," he said. However, both boys agree the education they receive in Cohasset is worth waking up early for.

But in addition to the education they receive in the classroom, the two say they are getting a different kind of education on the farm. Since they began working on the farm during the winter, they were somewhat limited at first in the tasks that could be completed due to the snow and ice. They split wood, and learned how to mix soil for seeds. Because the farm is totally organic, soil mixtures need to be planned very carefully to ensure plants have enough nutrients to thrive without any chemical fertilizers. Education Director John Belber said by mixing different ingredients like sand, bone meal, and kelp, it helps make good, healthy soil to help the plants flourish, and soil the boys have mixed has been great. He said many of the plants that are currently sprouting in the greenhouse are growing in the boys' soil, and they are thriving.

Carlos said now that the weather is warmer, they are learning how to drive the tractor, which is his favorite duty so far. Being able to drive the machine will allow them to move materials to a site where they are beginning preparations for their biggest project yet.

Many areas on the farm have recreational walking trails, but portions are very wet, which makes for a messy hike. In addition, farming on various portions of the farm becomes difficult when it is necessary to cross water and mud with supplies in order to reach the garden. The boys have begun clearing a path where they will build a bridge resembling a boardwalk which will allow machinery and people to access the far-reaching areas of the farm. They have also started working on clearing the brook which runs nearby, to help direct its flow.

"They're getting an education, but it's also a tremendous benefit to the farm," said Belber. He added because of all the work the boys are doing, especially building the bridge, he hopes it will encourage more visitors to take advantage of the walking trails the site has to offer on its more than 130 acres.

The boys say they are planning to continue working on the farm for the remainder of this school year, keeping an eye on the new beehives the farm has just started. "I'm just waiting until the raspberry fields start growing up," said Miguel. But even after this year, the two say they have plans to return to work at Holly Hill until graduation.

HEALTH NOTES

Wastewater committee tackles sewer, septic issues

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last week the Mariner published an editorial saying that the Sewer Commission, Board of Health, Planning Board, Water Commission and Selectmen should conduct a forum that would focus on the Town's wastewater and sewer issues. The fact is that there are two committees which take up wastewater issues.

The first is the Wastewater Committee which was appointed by the selectmen on August 6, 2002. The charge of the Committee is:

- To make recommendations to the Board of Selectmen and the Town Meeting relating to wastewater issues in Town taking into consideration the following:
- Identify the various areas in Town which fall into logical districts in terms of wastewater needs and problems.
- Study the available technical options for disposing of wastewater within Town.
- Investigate the available options, and develop the outline of a logical plan, which would ultimately satisfy the needs of individuals in efficiently and economically managing their wastewater disposal requirements.

Address the various problems or potential problems, which are known to exist.

Current members of the Committee are: James Dedes, Vicki Neaves, John Cavanaro, Chair; Steve Bobo, Clerk, BoH; Joseph Godzik; Ray Kasperowicz, Sewer Commission and Jeffery Moy Paul Davis, Resigned

Committee meetings are monthly or bimonthly. Meeting dates are published in accordance with the sunshine laws. I'm sure that any members of the Committee would be happy to talk about committee work. The committee has been meeting regularly and publishes minutes. We are working on a report to the Selectmen with a target date of June.

This is a technical committee and discusses current and advanced wastewater technology as well as seeking ideas for equitably paying for wastewater disposal. We are working on a final report which will contain a prioritized listing of wastewater management options for the Town as well as a an estimate of the effectiveness of wastewater disposal for every parcel in Town. Technology is changing rapidly, and new viable solutions are constantly being brought to our attention.

We have reviewed many thousands of pages from Town documents by contractors to the Sewer Commission and the BoH. I believe the committee has as good a grasp of the feasible and appropriate status of our wastewater issues as anyone. We requested the Water Commission to come before the committee but they declined and told us to come before a regular meeting of the commission which we did. At this meeting we received information relating to their problems and recommendations. We have a Town Planner who has done a remarkable job in supplying information and support to the Committee. It would be inappropriate for the Planning Board to attend these meetings, since the Planning Board has another jurisdiction.

The reason that Sewer issues have been discussed at different committees is because sewers and wastewater are separate jurisdictions and play by different rules. Accordingly, action, rather than discussion must be taken up by committees with the appropriate jurisdiction. When the layman sees wastewater, he thinks there are only two options: septic systems and sewers. This is no longer true. In Cohasset, where a complex land structure exists there are many viable solutions for dealing with wastewater. I can think of at least 20, but only one having the lowest total overall cost.

The Mariner was correct in saying that lack of a sewer system stalled development. Beginning in the early 1800s the way to design a town was to lay a sewer and people would build houses to get on the sewer. Wastewater management has become enormously more complex these days, but small suburban towns continued to use sewers as a means for favoring selected locations for new housing. To some extent Cohasset, in the 70s, when it turned down a state grant of $15 million for new sewers, was responding to pressure to limit growth in Town.

The end result was that during Cohasset's periods of great expansion many houses were built with questionable wastewater treatment. With the onset of Title 5 in the '80s and a more rigorous version in '95, the State's tactic for addressing failed systems was to inspect the system and upgrade upon sale of the house.

In Cohasset, where there is so much ledge, old fashioned sewers were enormously expensive. New sewers like the North Cohasset system reduced the cost somewhat, but still sewers have proved to be an expensive option compared to even the most expensive on-site system. The current reality is that there is no parcel in Cohasset with an existing home which can not be tied to an adequate wastewater system. However, the Wastewater Committee is reluctant to offer wastewater solutions in the absence of planning alternatives which would limit the growth rate for new construction.

The other committee is the newly appointed Water Resources Protection Committee which has just been formed, and which will have a Board of Health member.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Getting physical with the Army National Guard

side to test their strength and agility on a rock climbing wall, which was approximately 30 feet high.

It helps "instill confidence in the students," said O'Donnell, adding when students complete challenges like climbing to the top of the rock wall, and discover strength they might never have known they had, it is a great achievement whether the student decides he or she wants to sign up for the Guard or not.

O'Donnell said when he and other recruiters in his team visit local schools, they make every effort to bring fun, interactive activities that allow them to become familiar with the students. In addition to the rock climbing wall, recruiters will set up obstacle courses or bring various equipment for students to try out. If the students have met the recruiters on an informal basis, they are less likely to be intimidated and more likely to check out materials about joining the National Guard during the more formal recruitment days, he said.

O'Donnell said he was amazed with some of the students in Cohasset who kept trying over and over to reach the top of the rock climbing wall, showing great perseverance. That kind of character is exactly what the Guard looks for in new recruits, and he said he hopes through the programs he and other recruiters bring to area schools it will make students give more thought to signing up and hopefully boost recruitment numbers.

But the National Guard doesn't stop its outreach efforts with the high school students, it offers many programs which appeal to all members of the family. "All the programs we run are community based and everything is free," said O'Donnell. In the past, the Guard has been involved in parades, and welcomes family events where there's an opportunity to show off its various pieces of equipment. In Cohasset, the Guard has been a part of the "Touch-A-Truck," event, hosted by the Cohasset Call Firefighters Association. Not only were fire engines and ambulances on site for children to inspect, but army Humvees as well. O'Donnell said the Humvees will return to Cohasset again this year at the Relay For Life. In the near future, O'Donnell hopes to be able to bring a Blackhawk helicopter to Marshfield High School.

Local units of the National Guard have been playing a big role in the war in Iraq, and most recently, members of Hingham's 1058th Transportation Company returned from 14 months of service overseas. Initially the unit was responsible for the transport of supplies and troops operating between Kuwait and Iraq for the 1st Armor Division and the 3rd Infantry Division. From last June through March, the 1058th supported the 4th Infantry Division in Tikrit.

For more information on any branch of the Massachusetts National Guard, please visit its web site at www.state.ma.us/guard.

Congressmen urge seniors to get involved in prescription drug debate

By Amanda Gontarz
AGONTARZ@CNC.COM

One of the biggest concerns among South Shore senior citizens right now is the escalating costs of prescription drugs. Many say they are having to make choices between essential living expenses like food and heat or their prescriptions.

U.S. Congressmen William Delahunt, D-Quincy, and Dan Burton, R-IN, although across the aisle on many issues, happen to see eye-to-eye on this one. They agreed with a large group of seniors gathered last week at the Marshfield Senior Center that something should be done to control the costs of prescription drugs. Delahunt, co-chair of the Older Americans Caucus, said this is especially necessary for seniors, many of whom are living on fixed incomes and rely on numerous prescriptions each month.

"We are going to work to make the changes needed to reign in the cost of prescription drugs and make sure every senior citizen in this country has access to affordable prescription drugs. It will happen."
Congressman William Delahunt

"It's a moral issue, as well as a health care issue," he said. "But at the core, it's a moral issue."

Seniors like Bette Vagen are all too familiar with the high costs of prescription drugs.

Vagen, also president of Cape United Elderly, and her husband together pay just shy of $1,000 each month for their prescription medications. A survivor of several heart attacks, Vagen's monthly prescriptions cost $293 while they spend $697 on her husband's medications.

"We have Medicaid because we're poor, but every time the cost of living goes up you are afraid of going over the limit," she said.

Delahunt reminded the audience that it's not the pharmacists at the local drugstores who set the prices for prescriptions. "Do not blame the pharmacists because the pharmacist is not enjoying the same profits as the drug companies," he said. "Let them know you understand the reality of it."

Delahunt and Burton encouraged the seniors, who came from all over the South Shore and Cape Cod to attend this forum convened by Delahunt, to contact their senators and congressmen as a way of encouraging the government to make steps toward scaling back prices. With 2004 being an election year, Delahunt added that seniors would have a good chance at influencing the politicians to make some changes.

"Let's get it done this year," he said.

Delahunt said the U.S. Congress passed a piece of legislation, the Medicare Reform Act of 2003, last November that he believes "threatens Medicare as we know it." He said the bill does not meet the needs of seniors in terms of providing benefits toward prescription drugs.

"I believe changes have got to be made," he said. "We are going to work to make the changes needed to reign in the cost of prescription drugs and make sure every senior citizen in this country has access to affordable prescription drugs. It will happen. Believe me, it will happen."

The congressmen added that the bill was 700 pages and passed late at night, creating confusion for many in Washington. They agreed that changes need to be made to help seniors understand it as well as benefit from it.

Both said they believe the U.S. government should take a closer look at importing drugs from Canada, as they are considerably cheaper than medications sold here.

Burton said when his wife was diagnosed with breast cancer 10 years ago, he learned that some women in this country were paying up to $350 for a certain drug, one that could be purchased in Canada for $50.

"I found we are charging the highest prices for any pharmaceutical product you can think of," he said.

The U.S. government has been opposing the importation of drugs from Canada, claiming their safety requirements aren't as strict, but Burton, the chairman of the House subcommittee on human rights and wellness, said he brought in pharmacists and executives from Canada to speak on this subject.

Celebrate Older Americans Month

May is national Older Americans Month and an opportune time for everyone to become involved in contributing to the seniors in their communities — family members, neighbors, friends, mentors and teachers.

Spend time with a senior in your life — play a game together or go for a walk.

Council on aging directors suggest you ask them what they did for fun when they were young or to tell you stories about family members.

Send a card or letter to out-of-town grandparents or visit a nursing home and talk to the residents there.

"It is important to let seniors know how much they are loved and cared for," said Dan Veto, a certified senior advisor with Bankers Life and Casualty Company. "Many older Americans are concerned about the legacy they will leave behind. According to our 'Aging in America' survey, more than half of elderly adults want to be remembered for being a responsible parent or grandparent more than anything else, and spending time with older loved ones will give them an increased sense of security about preserving their legacies."

Another way to support older Americans is to advocate causes and issues that affect them the most – Medicare, Social Security and medical research to name a few. Experts say advocacy can be a powerful and necessary instrument in protecting the rights of seniors. Communicate to local, state and federal legislators the need for advancements in research and expanded health care. These actions implemented today can benefit not only seniors, but also those who are young and will want the same considerations down the road.

Older Americans are at special risk of losing strength, flexibility, endurance and balance without adequate exercise. However, it's been shown that physical exercise, even moderate activities such as walking or playing shuffleboard, has protective benefits to the brain as well. Senior experts encourage seniors to participate in fun exercise activities, such as golf, dancing or playing with a puppy, with older family members and friends.

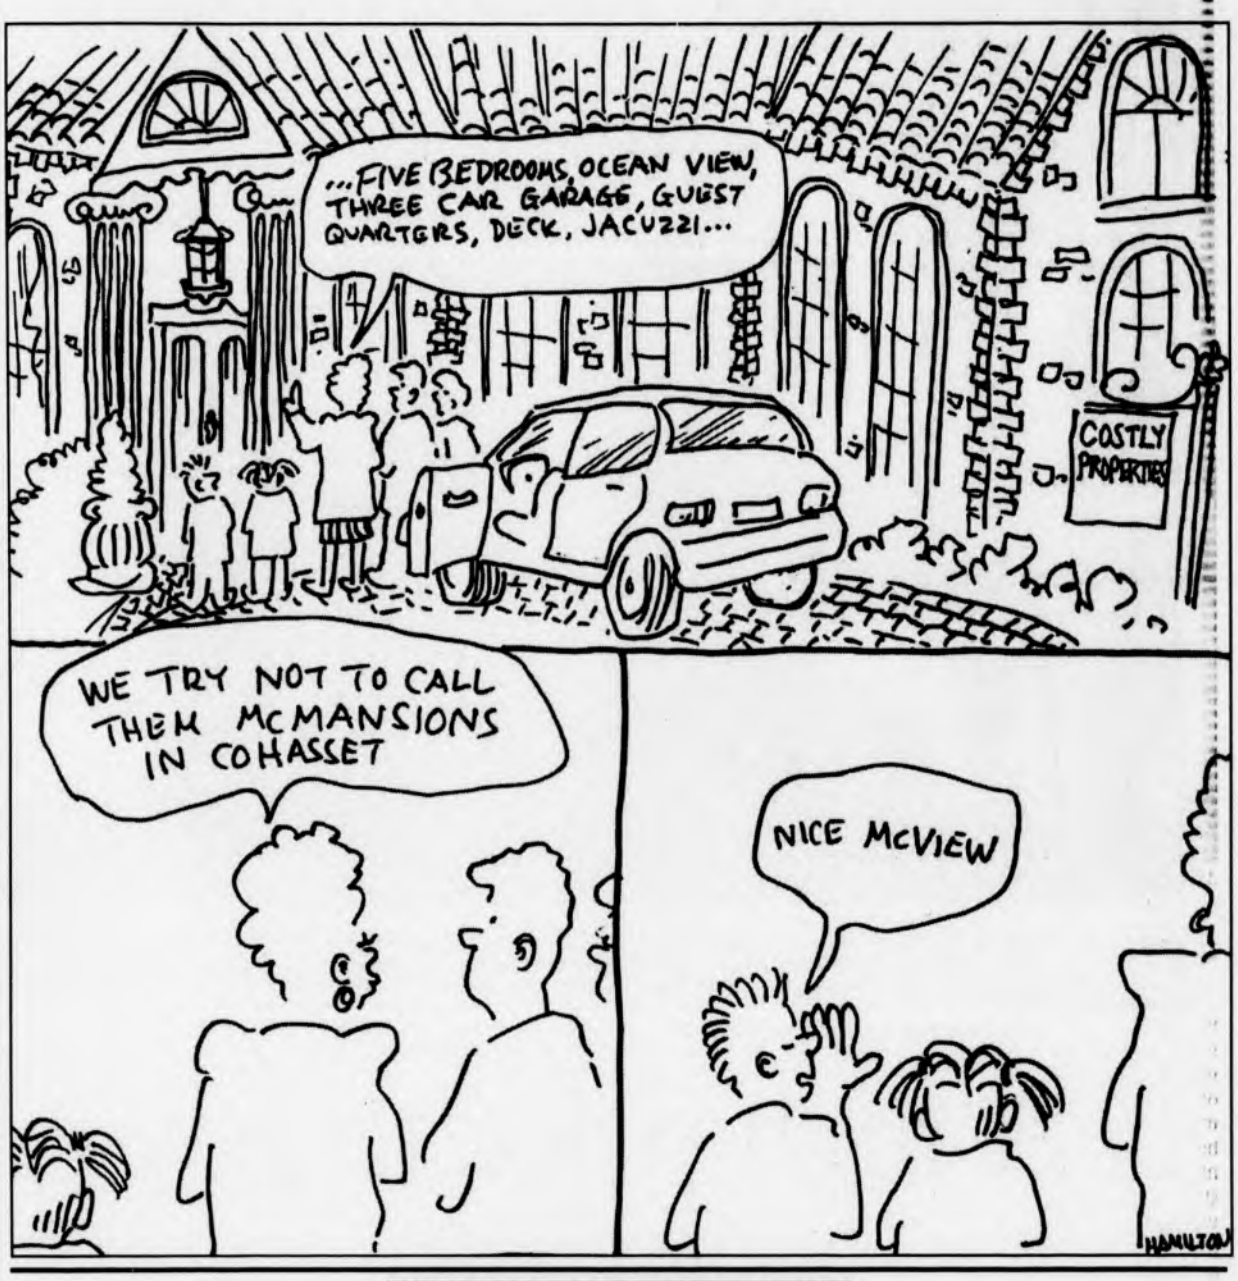
Law Day, U.S.A., 2004

A Proclamation by the President of the United States of America



The theme of this year's Law Day, "To Win Equality by Law: Brown v. Board at 50," celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Brown v. Board of Education.

The Declaration of Independence declared the equality of each person before God and the responsibility of Government to secure the rights of all. However, it was not until ratification of the 14th Amendment in 1868 that the equality of all citizens under law was guaranteed by the Constitution. Still, for decades afterwards, millions of African-American citizens were subjected to shameful discrimination, and in many public school systems, students were segregated by race. Finally, in the 1954 Brown decision, the Supreme Court ruled that segregating students in our public schools violated our Constitution.

Our Nation is grateful for the brave men and women and boys and girls who challenged segregation and helped make equal justice under law a reality for all Americans. We remember Thurgood Marshall, the heroic lawyer who represented Linda Brown and fought for her rights and the rights of all African Americans. We remember the nine justices of the Supreme Court of the United States who helped America begin to make equal justice under law a reality for African Americans.

Nearly 50 years after Brown, we appreciate the progress America has made, but we also recognize that there is still work to be done to ensure that our country lives up to the founding principle that all of God's children are created equal. As we observe this Law Day and commemorate the anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education, I encourage all Americans to celebrate the great distance we have traveled as a Nation and to continue our work to promote equality and opportunity for all.

American Cancer Society Relay For Life in Cohasset

Hundreds of walkers go around the clock to fight cancer during the American Cancer Society Relay For Life. This celebration of life brings numerous groups and individuals concerned about cancer together for a unified effort to fight back.

Teams of enthusiastic citizens will gather at Cohasset High School for an overnight relay against cancer from 3 p.m. Friday, June 18, until noon Saturday, June 19.

Relay For Life is a unique fund-raising event that allows participants from all walks of life — including patients, families, civic organizations, businesses, churches and community volunteers — to join together to fight cancer.

Relay For Life reminds us that progress has been made in the fight against cancer and that everyone who participates is making a difference.

Relay For Life opens as cancer survivors (anyone who has ever been diagnosed with cancer) walk or use a wheelchair to complete the Survivor's Lap during Opening Ceremonies on Friday at 6 p.m. This is an emotional time that sets the stage for the importance of each participant's contribution.

A festive atmosphere develops around the track. As walkers make new friends and spend time with old ones, the relay heats up and the camp-out begins. An atmosphere of camaraderie is created with team members entertaining each other, eating, playing games and, of course, walking for a great cause.

Highlighting the evening is the luminaria ceremony held after dark to honor cancer survivors and to remember those we have lost. The luminaria line the track and are left burning throughout the night to remind participants of the incredible importance of their contributions.

"Relay For Life is as much an awareness-raiser about the progress against cancer as it is a fund-raiser," said Justine Vanderlugt, publicity chairwoman. "Many of the participants will be people who have dealt with cancer themselves. Their involvement is proof of the progress that has been made in improving cancer survival rates and the quality of life following cancer treatment.

"The funds raised will enable us to continue our investment in the fight against cancer through educational programs, advocacy, research and services to patients," said Vanderlugt. Information about how to form a team or become involved in Relay For Life is available from the American Cancer Society at 1-800-ACS-2345, available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, or www.cancer.org.

Mill River Boatyard approval application

TO THE EDITOR:

The following letter was sent to the Planning Board and a copy was provided to the Mariner.

Dear Chairman Moore:

I am writing to comment on the Application for Site Plan Approval filed by Mill River Boatyard, LLC. I urge the Planning Board to require that any reconstruction or development on this site include the continued operation of the existing boatyard because of the essential services it provides to the fishing and lobster industry — the economy of Cohasset — and for recreational boaters who use Cohasset Harbor.

This Application is properly before you, pursuant to Cohasset Zoning Bylaws, Section 12.6(1)(b) which provides that "No permit to build, construct, reconstruct or expand any buildings or structure…. b. In any business… district where such construction, reconstruction, or expansion shall exceed a total gross floor area of two hundred square feet…" [Emphasis added.] without Site Plan Approval. This particular requirement in 1(b) does NOT apply only to nonconforming structures [which is in Section 1(a)]. The Mill River Boatyard LLC proposal is to "reconstruct" a total of about 9,584.4 square feet, including the construction of a new 726.3 s.f. building where the Quonset Hut used to be; so Site Plan Approval is clearly required.

The Planning Board should require the Applicant to disclose the proposed future use of the property. This is authorized in the Zoning Bylaws in Section 12.6(2)(a) that allows the Board to issue a Site Plan Approval if the Board finds that "the proposed development will be harmonious with and not harmful, injurious or objectionable to existing or future uses in the area" and Section 12.6(3) which requires that the Application for Site Plan review "shall also include information as to the nature and extent of the proposed use of buildings…" [Emphasis added]

The Applicant does not have all the Chapter 91 licenses that they need. The Planning Board should require the Applicant to disclose the status of their existing Chapter 91 permits and what additional Ch. 91 permitting is needed to complete the proposed Project. This is important because the property in question is on public land, tidelands, that are regulated by Chapter 91 which is designed to ensure that the use of public tidelands serves a public purpose and that such property is used for strictly water dependent uses such as the existing Mill River Boatyard and Lobster Pound.

Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection Chapter 91 regulations do not allow this proposed Project without the continued existence of the currently existing Boatyard. Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection regulations, 310 CMR 9.36(4) contain the following prohibitions for any "project" over tidelands [in these regulations the word "project" includes any work such as construction or reconstruction of structures over tidelands]:

"(4) The project shall not displace any water-dependent use that has occurred on the site within five years prior to the date of the license application, except on a clear showing by the applicant that said use:

did not take place on a reasonably continuous basis, for a substantial period of time; or has been or will be discontinued at the site by the user, for reasons unrelated to the proposed project or as a result of voluntary arrangements with the applicant.

Absent the above showings, the project shall include arrangements determined to be reasonable by the Department for the water-dependent use to be continued at its existing facility, or at a facility at an alternative location having physical attributes, including proximity to the water, and associated business conditions which equal or surpass those of the original facility and as may be identified in a municipal harbor plan, if any."

The existing Mill River Boatyard has been in operation at this location for many decades, providing an essential service to the Cohasset lobstering and fishing fleet and to recreational boaters – therefore the proposed Project cannot be allowed, under Ch. 91 regulations, to discontinue the existing boatyard. The Applicant needs to get a Chapter 91 license to complete the proposed Project, and to get that license they will not be permitted to close down the boatyard.

I urge the Planning Board, if they approve this Site Plan Application, to also require, under the Cohasset Zoning Bylaws, that the applicant continue the existing Mill River Boatyard with its current level of services to the Cohasset Harbor boating community. The Planning Board has the authority to impose such a condition, pursuant to Zoning Bylaws Section 12.6(5)(c) which states that the Planning Board may take final action that may consist of "A finding and determination, subject to such reasonable order of conditions, modifications, and restrictions as the planning board shall set forth, that the proposed construction, reconstruction, substantial exterior alteration, or addition will constitute a suitable development and will not result in significant detriment to the neighborhood or the natural qualities of the town." Since allowing the Project to go forward without keeping the existing boatyard would "result in significant detriment to the neighborhood", i.e. to Cohasset Harbor, the Planning Board can and should make such a finding and impose that requirement.

Teachers' fund is still growing

TO THE EDITOR:

Thanks to all who have pledged or contributed to the Save 3 Teachers Fund. Our current fund total is $35,000, a still growing number that reflects the level of commitment to education in Cohasset. Some elementary classes currently stand at 18 or 19 students. If those grade levels swell as high as 24 or 26 students, that 40-44 percent increase will surely undermine the quality of education, regardless of the talent and dedication of our wonderful teachers. Though most grade levels will not see such extreme increases, our children deserve better. The early school years are a crucial time to keep classes small to ensure a solid foundation for future learning.

While reducing class sizes is the focus, we want to be clear that this effort in no way intends to question or undermine the excellent work of the school committee and administration, all of whom are committed public servants. Our goal is simple: keep class sizes as small as possible. We have received a commitment from the school committee that the donation from "Save 3 Teachers Fund" will be earmarked for salaries of the three teaching positions being eliminated through attrition. We believe this effort demonstrates broad support for quality education and the teachers our children rely on, and serves as a positive message to all parties who are concerned about balancing educational needs and growing fiscal challenges.

Finally, please remember that the PSO Telethon is May 12. We urge you to give generously to this time-tested organization. Their programs have enriched the daily lives of all children who have passed through the Cohasset schools. We strongly support their fund-raising endeavors and share their common goal of providing the optimal educational environment for our children.

Our World yard sale support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum I would like to thank all the people who helped make our Spring Yard Sale fund-raiser a great success. The Yard Sale was held in the Museum space in the rear wing of the Paul Pratt Library. People from all over donated items, and a hard-working crew (you know who you are!!) helped organize, price and sell everything from clothing, baby joggers and furniture to bikes and skis. The proceeds of the event, totaling over $3,500, will be put toward the Museum, whose first floor exhibits are slated to open early this fall.

Our World Children's Global Discover Museum is a non-profit educational institution organized to create informative and interactive educational opportunities promoting world awareness. To learn more about Our World visit our website at <http://www.our-worldcgdm.org>. Thanks again to everyone who helped and attended our Yard Sale!

'What makes my Mom special'

Mrs. Lauren Cook's second-grade class at the Osgood School.

A Mother's Day gift from Mrs. Cook's class at the Osgood School.

My mom is special. My mom has beautiful curly brown hair. My mom is kindhearted and funny. My mom is an at-home mother. She takes care of the family and the animals. She makes all the snacks for us. She helps me when I get hurt and with my homework. I like when we do stuff in the garden. I also like when we go to the pool together. I feel loved when my mom reads to me and when she tucks me into bed. I love my mom!

— Sophie Arnold

My mom is the best. She is tall and thin. She has brown eyes and light brown hair. She is very nice and is really loving. She works at home and is good at cooking. She takes me to my piano lessons and does all the cooking. She helps me do my homework and helps me solve my problems. I like to go swimming with her. I like to ride my bike with her. When she snuggles with me I feel loved. When she kisses me goodnight I feel loved. I love my mom.

— Derek Benson

My mom is great. My mom is kindhearted, a good cook, and very nice. She has black hair and blue eyes. My mom is a stay-at-home mom. She does a lot of the work. She does the dishes and a lot more things. She helps me with my homework and reading. I like to play with her and cook with her. When she hugs me it makes me feel loved. I love my mom very, very much.

— Kate Broderick

My mom is the best. My mom has blue eyes and she is tall and pretty. She has yellow hair. She likes to play with me. She is a good cook. My mom works hard being a mom at home. She is a Brownie leader and she cooks our dinner every night. My mom helps me by doing my hair every day and she helps me with my homework and lots of other things. I love when my mom takes me to the beach and collects shells and sea glass with me. I love when she takes me to Nantucket and rides her bike with me. I love when my mom gives me a kiss and a hug. I love my mom!

— Victoria Bryan

My mom is special! She has a kind heart and a nice heart. My mom is pretty and very nice. My mom has pretty curly brown hair and beautiful brown eyes. My mom is pretty tall. My mom is very smart. Swear words and cable TV

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I hate the bring this up, the First Amendment and all that, but cable TV seems to have kicked off every last restraint, written and unwritten, that once governed the use of four-letter Anglo Saxon words describing bodily functions and body parts.

The thought occurred to me the other night when I was watching HBO's new series, "Deadwood."

Now I'm usually not the least bit squeamish about such things, having learned most of the words as a boy while smoking Avalon cigarettes in the company of my peers behind Pop Lawrence's drug store on Quincy Avenue.

The critic in me tells me that "Deadwood" is a good series but why do I feel that I have to pull down the blinds so that people can't look in the windows and see what I'm watching or wear a disguise so that I can't be identified by the neighbors if they manage to sneak a peek.

I used to think that Tony Soprano and his friends had explored thoroughly the limits of what used to be called "swear words" but they are choir boys compared to Al Swearingen and the miners who frequent his Gem Saloon in Deadwood.

I used to think that Tony Soprano and his friends had explored thoroughly the limits of what used to be called "swear words" but they are choir boys compared to Al Swearingen and the miners who frequent his Gem Saloon in Deadwood.

How times have changed — and not necessarily for the better.

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, a major cultural controversy developed when, in one of the final scenes from the movie "Gone With the Wind," Rhett Butler tells Scarlett, "Frankly, my dear, I just don't give a damn."

For a while, Western Civilization teetered on the edge of destruction but then cooler heads prevailed and soon even us kids were able to damn things up and down with impunity with having our mouths washed out with soap.

I remember when the book, "Strange Fruit," came out and it was discovered that That Word appeared on page so-and-so and within days that page in the library copy was so dog-eared that it had to be withdrawn from circulation and placed under the counter.

Right now, That Word is the subject of a whole book, loosed on the public in 1995 by no less a publisher than Random House, which traces its origin and usage, including its use in tandem with other words like flying and SNAFU (the original, not the cleaned up version).

Its author is described as "one of lexicography's brightest young stars" and a graduate of the University of Chicago and Trinity College at Cambridge University.

In the old days, it wasn't scholarship that drove us kids to the library to stagger from shelf to table with that impossibly large tome. We were just looking up dirty words in the unabridged dictionary.

Kids nowadays don't have to do that. All they have to do is sneak downstairs at 9 o'clock Sunday night and tune in to "Deadwood" --- if Mom and Dad haven't gotten there first, that is.

All-facilities stickers to go on sale June 7

The expiration date of the beach and Recycling Transfer Facility permits is June 30. The "all facility sticker" for the next fiscal year will be on sale starting the week of June 7 during normal business hours at the town hall and at the DPW garage on weekends starting June 12 from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and Monday-Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. An "all facilities sticker" will be $30, the second vehicle $30 and seniors is $15.

This sticker will allow access to the Recycling Transfer Facility, Sandy Beach as well as, include parking at all areas in town that require a sticker. In addition, residents will be required to purchase special bags in which to dispose of all trash that cannot be recycled. These bags will be offered at the Dept. of Public Works building and various locations throughout the town. You are encouraged to purchase your sticker by mail by providing the appropriate fee, a copy of your current registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Richer towns have better schools despite Ed Reform

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The week felt like a fascinating mosaic of agreements and disagreements between the House and the governor. Except in a mosaic, the pieces combine to form a coherent picture. These pieces didn't.

The week began with a long-awaited finding from the courts that found the House leadership and Gov. Romney aligned in trepidation and displeasure. Superior Court Judge Margot Botsford declared that in Hancock v. Driscoll, the plaintiffs were right. The "Driscoll" in the lawsuit was state Education Commissioner David Driscoll. Plaintiffs argued that despite all the steps taken in the education reform efforts of the 1990s, Massachusetts schools still discriminate by class — that students' education, i.e. their destiny is too dependent on where they're lucky or unlucky enough to live.

The state has an obligation to fix the problem, Botsford found, by erasing the disparities in funding between rich and poor districts. Some estimate the cost of the solution at $2 billion. The finding is far from final — it is simply a preliminary examination of the case, disposition of which is now in the hands of the Supreme Judicial Court.

Romney and House Speaker Finneran both found the SJC's recent high-visibility gay marriage ruling appalling. They agreed the court was going much too far in the direction of dictating social policy to lawmakers, executives and voters who should retain that power to themselves. Both leaders made statements that sounded as if they were both pleading with the court and warning it — don't do more legislating in the area of school budgets.

The two agreed in that regard, but sharply diverged on charter schools. The House voted to approve a moratorium pushed by defenders of struggling traditional public schools, while Romney wants to lift the state-imposed cap on charter schools in response to high student and parental demand.

It is, of course, in no way only about policy. The mainstream Democrats hold the teacher's unions and other foes of charters as important constituencies. Each group helps the other thrive, and charter schools are seen as a threat. Meanwhile, Romney is developing a constituency in the charter school movement, and the more charter schools are approved, the larger his political support base grows.

But Finneran and Romney essentially found themselves in agreement on how to address the implications. Tax hikes were tested on the House floor and Finneran helped make sure they failed. Romney approved of that. Now a sizeable contingent in the House appears to agree with Romney, their frequent nemesis — should school funding need to be equalized, wealth is going to have to be redistributed in the form of local aid from better-off districts to poorer ones. That's unlikely to be a pretty scene.

Those were hardly the only elements of the complex dynamics in play during budget week — the ongoing struggle over the fate of the transportation bureaucracy, the correct approach to funding billions in local school projects statewide, and the best path for implementing more early childhood education all brought out different political ideologies and operational philosophies, all laced with the struggle for power growing ever tenser as legislative elections draw ever nearer.

With all these bits and pieces of policymaking whacking against each other, to the extent they formed an image, the motif was uncertainty, if not chaos. Or perhaps just — democracy.

It was a week primarily — but not exclusively — about the House budget. Two items form pieces of what Finneran is not bashful about outlining as his legacy: early childhood education for all, and almost ironclad budget stability via reserve funds.

Budget highlights:

• Finneran's plan on early childhood education is so sufficiently sweeping that really it's more than a highlight — in some weeks it would be the most important event on Beacon Hill. If approved by the Senate and governor it would establish a Department of Early Education and Care to eventually set up and run "voluntarily, universally accessible, high quality early childhood education and care to all preschool-aged children." Funding for the initial phase is slightly below $100,000; the annual full cost of actual implementation has not been estimated. Finneran and other proponents acknowledged the timing is somewhat awkward given the budget crisis, but advocates echoed Marie St. Fleur, D-Boston, House chair of Education, when she commented, "You can be paralyzed by difficult times or you can see them as opportunities."

• Another splashy Finneran initiative will be at a Constitutional Convention May 12. Finneran wants to dedicate 1 percent of annual tax revenues to build budget reserve funds. Critics say such a constitutional provision would bind the budget-writing hands of future legislatures and governors too tightly — whether they want to spend, or cut taxes.

• The House voted 111 to 44 to reject a Republican bid to implement Romney's merger of the Mass. Turnpike Authority and the Mass. Highway Department. Romney says it's the type of reform voters demand. Democrats said there may be minor savings, but accused Romney of mostly being interested in spending turnpike reserves.

• Passage of an amendment requiring the Department of Conservation and Recreation to ensure that all pools and parks shall remain open for the full summer season and that the beaches have their full amount of required maintenance and upkeep. Department leaders this week said House budget cuts threaten all operations.

• Romney tells peers Massachusetts won't allow out-of-state gay unions — The governor sent a letter to all other 49 states, noting that Massachusetts has a law banning people from being married here if their marriage would be illegal in their home state. Taking a broad interpretation, Romney writes to his peers that since gays and lesbians may not legally wed in any other state, they will not be able to do so in Massachusetts even after marriage becomes legal for Bay State couples May 17. The letter, sure to grab the attention of journalists nationwide, will do nothing to quell talk that the governor is making the maximum use of this opportunity to build a national profile. His team argues that what he's actually doing is pursuing his own beliefs and those of the majority of Massachusetts residents as vigorously as possible.

• Metrowest found healthiest in survey of state's regions — Fat jokes and smoking humor abounded in the corridor in the wake of a Department of Public Health report comparing lifestyle and health levels in regions statewide. The far west had the highest rates of obesity and smoking; MetroWest came in lowest, with Boston far behind. Officials shied away from the chance to offer a definitive explanation for the disparity between regions.

• Romney names task force, releases insurer-departure study — The governor continued working on his promised improvement of the auto insurance system. Romney helped release a report based on Division of Insurance data showing 64 percent of the state's auto insurers have departed Massachusetts in the past 14 years. Thursday, he named members to a task force expected to produce reforms in the system; Romney favors more competition among insurers and an end to many of the subsidies on which the current system relies.

$22.5 BILLION FISCAL 2005 STATE BUDGET (H 4600)

House 157-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate the House version of a $22.5 billion fiscal 2005 state budget. Amendments that were added following four long days of debate include establishing a Department of Early Education and Care to administer and oversee the development and implementation of a program of voluntary, early childhood education and care to all preschool-aged children; allowing information about some of the state's most dangerous sex offenders to be posted on the Internet; a state income tax break for active military personnel serving in combat zones; barring the Board of Education from approving new Commonwealth Charter Schools until July 2005 or until the Legislature approves a new tuition and financing formula for the schools; and creating a commission to study the feasibility of selling advertising on state web-sites. Supporters said the package is a fiscally responsible and balanced one that does not raise taxes, makes the right choices in light of the state's fiscal challenges and even restores some of the cuts made in last year's budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the budget). — Y

HIKE INCOME TAX RATE FROM 5.3 PERCENT TO 5.95 PERCENT (H 4600)

House 27-129, rejected an amendment raising the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to 5.95 percent. Amendment supporters said this reasonable increase would generate some $700 million in revenue that can be used to restore and/or increase funding for many human service programs to help the sick, elderly and poor who will be severely hurt without this funding. They noted it would also allow for an increase in local aid and prevent the layoffs of teachers, firefighters and police. Amendment opponents said the hike would hurt an already faltering economy and argued that maintaining a lower tax rate creates jobs and eventually results in increased tax revenue. They noted that taxpayers currently have the option to pay the higher 5.95 percent rate voluntarily but only a handful have chosen to do so. (A "Yea" vote is for the hike to 5.95 percent. A "Nay" vote is against the hike). — N

THREE PERCENT LOCAL MEALS TAX (H 4600)

House 66-90, rejected an amendment allowing cities and towns to impose up to a three percent local restaurant meals tax on top of the existing 5 percent state meals tax. The amendment allows each community to retain 75 percent of the revenue and provides that the remaining 25 percent be distributed to all 351 communities under a formula determined by the Department of Revenue. The tax would take effect only if approved by a city council, city council and mayor, town meeting or town council— depending on the community's form of government. Amendment supporters said this would simply allow, not require, communities to impose the tax and have the opportunity to raise revenue to support schools, police and firefighters. They noted that even communities that do not impose the tax would receive some revenue under the formula. Amendment opponents said a tax hike is unwarranted and argued it would hurt local restaurants and the economy. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing the meals tax. A "Nay" vote is against allowing it). — N

DEDUCT LOCAL USER FEES (H 4600)

House 53-103, rejected an amendment allowing taxpayers to annually deduct from their taxable income up to $1000 in fees paid to a city or town for their child's participation in sports, academic or other student activities, transportation to or from a public school and trash pick-up programs. Amendment supporters said many communities have imposed these user fees that are hurting middle and low-income families. They argued that allowing the deduction could save many families some $53 per year. Amendment opponents said the amendment is fiscally irresponsible because no one has real figures on how many families are paying these fees and how much revenue the state would lose. Some argued that the loss in state revenue would mean further cuts in important programs. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing the deduction. A "Nay" vote is against allowing it). — Y

REPEAL PRIVATIZATION LAW (H 4600)

House 23-130, rejected an amendment repealing the 1993 so-called "Pacheco Law" that regulates the privatization of state services which cost more than $200,000. The law establishes a series of conditions that must be met before a private sector company is allowed to provide certain state services instead of the state doing so. Amendment supporters said the Pacheco Law is so restrictive that it has virtually stopped the privatization of state services. They noted the law gives the state auditor excessive power to stop a proposed privatization contract including the power to reject a contract if he simply determines it is "not in the public interest." They argued that private companies can often provide services at a lower cost than the state and noted that repeal of the law would allow more privatization of state services and save the state millions of dollars that could be used to fund important programs. Amendment opponents said that prior to passage of the Pacheco law, Governor William Weld's administration implemented extensive privatization of state services without any oversight or regulation of the process. They argued that the law is designed to ensure that the quality of privately delivered services is equal to services that would be delivered by the state and that the privatization results in a savings. They also noted that the law protects workers hired by the private company by ensuring that they are provided with health insurance and paid at least the same wage paid to current state employees who would otherwise provide the services. (A "Yea" vote is for repealing the Pacheco Law that regulates privatization. A "Nay" vote is against repeal of the Pacheco Law). — N

BAN GENDER-BASED ANNUITIES (H 4600)

House 62-94, rejected an amendment prohibiting insurance companies from using gender as a factor in the sale and payout of an annuity policy. Amendment supporters said it is unfair that men and women purchase annuities at the same price but women receive a lower monthly payout. They argued that it is time to guarantee equal rights for women and prohibit this type of blatant anti-women gender discrimination. Amendment opponents said this is not an equal rights issue but simply a consumer one based on the fact that women generally live longer than men. They noted that women may receive a lower monthly payout but their lifetime payout is in most cases equal to or more than a man's lifetime one. (A "Yea" vote is for making annuities gender-neutral. A "Nay" vote is against making them gender-neutral). — N

$399.4 MILLION FOR SCHOOL BUILDING ASSISTANCE (H 4600)

House 24-133, rejected an amendment providing $399,498,865 in funding for school building assistance grants and reimbursements for cities and towns. Amendment supporters said this would assist in honoring the state's commitment to communities that were promised reimbursement for school building projects. They argued it is unfair that many communities voted for local tax increases to fund these projects based on promised state aid on which the state has reneged. They noted that the House budget does not provide any money for this program and urged members to be skeptical about the likelihood that a separate House plan to restructure the school building assistance program would ever be approved by the Legislature. Amendment opponents said House and Senate leaders have a plan to create a new independent authority to oversee a newly structured program to divert one-fifth of the state's five-cent sales tax to a fund that would accelerate school building assistance for cities and towns. They argued that it is unnecessary to adopt a budget amendment because this separate piece of legislation will soon be finalized and considered by the Legislature. (A "Yea" vote is for the $399,498,865 in funding for school building assistance. A "Nay" vote is against it). — N

$2 MILLION FOR STRIP SEARCH SUIT (H 4330)

Senate 27-11, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of a section providing $2 million to assist in funding Suffolk County's class action law suit settlement with more than 5000 women who were illegally strip searched at the Suffolk County Jail. The settlement was the result of a court ruling that it was illegal to have a policy that requires an automatic strip search of female pre-arraignment detainees but does not mandate the same search for male ones. Override supporters said that Suffolk County has already paid $2.2 million to settle the suit and cannot afford the additional $2 million without making major budget cuts that would hurt the prison's budget and affect public safety. They said that the state and/the county would likely be sued unless payment is made. Override opponents said that the lawsuit is the responsibility of Suffolk County and argued that it is outrageous for the state to provide additional funding for one favored and powerful county. They noted that many other counties across the state are also feeling the budget crunch and could use additional state funds. (A "Yea" vote is for providing $2 million. A "Nay" vote is against it). — N

MENINGITIS IMMUNIZATION AWARENESS (S 2155)

Senate 38-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill requiring all public and private secondary schools, colleges, day care centers and youth camps to distribute to a child's parents information about the risk of meningitis and the availability, effectiveness and risks of the meningitis vaccine. Supporters said bacterial meningitis is a dangerous and contagious disease and argued that is time for the state to step up to the plate and do what it can to ensure that families are educated about the dangers and preventive measures. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill). — Y

LOCAL AID RESOLUTIONS

Senate 37-0, approved resolutions stating the intent of the House and Senate regarding how much local aid it would provide to cities and towns in the fiscal 2005 state budget and how it would be distributed. The resolutions level fund Lottery Assistance and Additional Local Assistance at last year's funding levels and include increases of $78 million in Chapter 70 education aid, $80 million in special education reimbursement and $11.7 million in regional school transportation funding. Supporters said these numbers would ensure that cities and towns do not experience the difficult local aids cuts that they endured last year. They noted that approving the resolutions now would inform communities how much local aid they can expect so that they can plan their municipal budgets. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions). — Y

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS FOR SENIORS

Senate 37-0, approved resolutions stating the intent of the Legislature to provide $110 million in the fiscal 2005 budget for the Prescription Advantage program for seniors over age 65 and low-income individuals with disabilities who work less than 40 hours per week. The plan includes an annual out-of-pocket spending limit and members are required to pay premiums, deductibles and co-payments on a sliding scale based on their gross annual household income. Supporters said this $14 million above last year's spending would ensure that more seniors are able to enroll in this program that currently helps 90,000 seniors who otherwise would go without the drugs or be forced to cut back on other household expenses. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions). — Y

Self-funding of our discretionary services

TO THE EDITOR:

It is with sadness that I must inform the 1117 Cohasset residents that care about fiscal responsibility that our Board of Selectmen have failed in one of their first tests. Our august body has continued with their past irresponsible policy by using taxpayer money to maintain facilities, such as Sandy Beach, instead of using the funds to pay teachers or lower the taxes on our elderly and permitting deceptive funding practices.

This signals a continuation of the old policy that will necessarily lead to an override next year and the year after, for as far as the eye can see. It is obvious that our Board has either not heard the message of fiscal responsibility or is incapable of acting on it. I choose to give Town Hall the benefit of the doubt and assume they have not heard the clarion call for smart fiscal management. If they have not heard, is this the time to deliver the news, before we dig ourselves into a deeper hole?

If you believe that fiscal responsibility is important to Cohasset, you should let our Board of Selectmen know right now. Ask the Board to adopt a policy that requires every discretionary Town service to fully fund itself and prohibit the use of taxpayer dollars for such services. This self-funding policy means that each user of a discretionary service (like Sandy Beach) must pay their fair share to cover the operating costs and overhead required to maintain the service.

Unfortunately, this abuse of taxpayer funds is not the only recent incident. What have the Selectmen done about the discovery of $30,000 buried in the School budget? Who will investigate how the School Committee, Advisory Committee and Board of Selectmen could have overlooked this fund that could be used to reduce the override or pay part of a teacher's salary? I wonder if this is the tip of an iceberg of buried treasure in a budget that was reported to have no fat?

Post Office Food Drive

TO THE EDITOR:

The Post Office Food Drive will take place this Saturday, May 8 to benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry. This Food Drive provides us with enough food to stay stocked through the Summer months. The following items are needed: condiments, jelly, spaghetti sauce, peanut butter, large-sized fruit juices, cereal, canned fruit, snacks, coffee, shampoo, dish and laundry detergent, toilet paper, paper towels, and Kleenex.

Please remember to place your donation next to your mailbox on Saturday and be sure to check for expiration dates. Thank you in advance for your continued generosity.

Kindness appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

Many thanks to one of Cohasset's finest, police officer who helped push our disabled vehicle out of the middle of the road into our driveway last week.

His kind efforts were very much appreciated.

Sewer editorial left out some homes

TO EDITOR,

Your recent editorial calling for a sewer forum was most appropriate.

However, I was disappointed that you gave no consideration to the people who really deserve to have "first dibs", as you put it, on any excess sewer capacity which should become available. It's not Cedarmere, nor Avalon, nor Northland. It's the owners of existing homes in Cohasset. It's not the "Johnny-Come-Latelies" who want to profit from what rightly belongs to current home owners.

As an example, there are 38 homes on Deep Run, Rust Way and Jerusalem Road which abut both the Little Harbor-Atlantic Avenue and North Cohasset Sewer Districts, but are included in neither. The Environmental Impact Report filed for the Little Harbor Project states that until this environmentally sensitive area is sewered; capacity allocation for a new development should not be entertained.

The Sewer Commission has accepted sewer connection applications filed by approximately 25 of the owners from this area. These applications should be honored before any new development is awarded sewer capacity.

Author event

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library and Buttonwood Books & Toys will host Daggers & Desserts, an evening of mystery and delicious desserts, tonight Thursday, May 6, at 7 p.m. at the library. Featured authors will be Linda Barnes "Deep Pockets: A Carlotta Carlyle Mystery", David Daniel, "Goofy Foot: An Alex Rasmussen Mystery" and Katherine Hall Page, discussing "The Body in the Attic: A Faith Fairchild Mystery".

All three authors feature local areas as the setting for their novels. "Deep Pockets" takes place at Harvard, "Goofy Foot" is situated in Standish, a fictional town between Boston and Plymouth and "The Body in the Attic" is located in Cambridge. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. For more information please call 781 383-1348.

Spring into wellness

Spring into wellness - renew yourself with natural wellness technologies is the theme of an exciting presentation to be held at the library on Tuesday, May 18, at 7 p.m. and on Thursday, May 20, at 1 p.m. If you have low energy, trouble sleeping, tired achy feet or legs, sore joints, or just want to have renewed energy and feel great, then this educational workshop is for you. Cohasset Nutritionist and Wellness consultant, Patricia Messing-Hague, will discuss innovative and unique ways to help the body heal itself and stay well, vigorous and energetic! Special guest speaker Carole Siegal of Cohasset will tell the story of her health renewal. This program is free and open to everyone. If you have questions, call Patricia Messing-Hague at 781 383-2410.

Haddad era comes to an end at Town Hall

Sullivan said the emergency meeting was held because issues came to the board's attention that from an administrative standpoint needed to be discussed, but the meeting was kept short. The meeting was posted by Town Clerk Marion Douglas Saturday morning, but the rules for posting meetings change with emergency situations, Sullivan said, and the Open Meeting Law was not violated.

Sullivan expected the board would have a statement on the issue after about 30 minutes of executive session Tuesday night. The board went into executive session at roughly 8:30 p.m.. But time wore on, and Sullivan emerged at one point to address reporters from various news media who had camped out in the hall, saying a resolution might not be possible that night. When he emerged for a second time at roughly 11 p.m., it was only to say, "We're done for tonight."

When Sullivan declined to comment on the matter and left the building, questioning shifted to other board members who also declined to comment, stating all questions should be directed to the chairman. Before the board went home, the only official word was Haddad was on a voluntary two-week vacation, which was effective Monday, May 3. Sullivan said Haddad appointed Buckley as interim Town Manager when he went on vacation, as is usually done.

Adding to the drama Tuesday night was the presence of Police Chief Robert Jackson, who waited in the hallway outside the selectmen's chambers apparently hoping to talk with the board while three officers were outside the building. Jackson left the building at around 10 p.m., and never met with the board. In a telephone interview Wednesday, Jackson said he had been there for another executive session matter, but could not comment on the specifics.

Haddad, who was at work last Friday morning, did not immediately return calls placed to his cell phone or messages left on his e-mail for this story.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Sullivan said Haddad's resignation, which was due to "personal reasons" is not related to the police matter, which has been on hold for 45 days to allow time for the town and the two officers on paid administrative leave to enter into mediation. Haddad, who could hire and fire town employees, placed the men on leave and was serving as the hearing officer through the disciplinary proceedings. Sullivan said it was completely a coincidence that Haddad went on vacation the day the mediation period ended.

Because Haddad was the hearing officer, Sullivan said other people that have been involved in the matter will have to take on his responsibilities. Haddad has also been very involved in working with both the heirs of the Cook Estate property and the developers of Northland Residential, who are trying to build senior housing on the site. Sullivan said he will step into that role a little bit, and others that have been involved with the project will help out as well. "We'll all have to divvy up the responsibilities," he said.

Sullivan said he has spoken with almost every Town Hall employee personally to let them know of Haddad's resignation. In the next few weeks, a Town Manager selection committee will be formed, and in the future, the position will be advertised and potential applicants will be given some time to respond. The entire selection process to find a new Town Manager will most likely take between three to six months.

Haddad, a former Littleton town administrator, took over in Cohasset in August 1997.

When then town administrator Gregory Doyon decided to move on, a citizens' group seized the opportunity to push for a profound change in town government. Soon backed by the Government Structure Committee, the group sought to replace the existing "weak" town administrator position, with no authority to hire and fire — to a Town Manager with that power and more.

The town needed professional leadership; someone to run the day-to-day matters so selectmen could concentrate on policy, was the battle cry that resonated with a majority at Town Meeting that spring. The Cohasset Town Manager Act was later approved by the state Legislature.

One of two finalists for the job, which promised an annual salary of about $60,000 and attracted some 40 applicants at the time, the youthful Haddad sold selectmen on his budgetary expertise. They liked his desire to face challenges head on.

Haddad's salary has nearly doubled over his tenure, and is now at roughly $110,000. Among his major accomplishments were consolidating the Department of Public Works; bringing paramedics on board the fire department; creating the position of Town Finance Director; hiring a new police chief and a new DPW chief; working with selectmen to ink a Greenbush mitigation agreement with the MBTA and working with Cashman-Balfour Beatty on train construction plans; overseeing $42 million in school building projects; embarking on the village revitalization project and helping to negotiate an agreement with the Cook heirs for a town-sponsored senior housing project — all while the town extended its sewers and upgraded its water distribution system.

Successful overrides for the operating budget, sewers, and school buildings helped boost the town's bond rating under Haddad's watch, saving upwards of $750,000 as the town was poised to borrow about $40 million for the Deer Hill and middle-high school building projects.

The events of this week have not been the first time Haddad has been under scrutiny.

Haddad's combination of power and personality may have led to a clash in the summer of 2001 when he and Planning Board member Peter Pratt got into a heated verbal altercation over a meeting Haddad had called with some department heads, board chairmen and AvalonBay development officials. The aftermath of the argument ended up in the selectmen's lap. Selectmen, who ultimately backed Haddad, hired an independent investigator to examine cross-complaints of harassment and verbal abuse between Haddad and Pratt.

Still, despite the support of the Board of Selectmen, it was an ugly time. The dispute was aired publicly and provided fodder for newspaper stories.

"If I could change anything, I would change the manner in which I dealt with Mr. Pratt that day," Haddad said in an August 2002 interview.

The incident gave him pause and may have played a role in Haddad's plans to consider moving on to the town administrator post in Dedham earlier in 2002. But selectmen each approached Haddad individually asking him to stay. They renegotiated his contract and also agreed to boost his salary from $90,000 to $102,000.

No promise for sewer hookups to Atlantic Avenue in Hull, which would cost about $250,000 including connecting the two Hull homes.

- Use its own capacity in Hull, but connect to the town sewer line along Jerusalem Road that connects to Hull near West Corner, and pay the town $100,000 for the use of the pipe.
- Use some of the town's capacity and connect to town line along Jerusalem Road

The developers had negotiated with Hull to purchase sewer capacity at roughly $30,000 per household, and Hull gave the go-ahead, but the Cohasset Sewer Commission denied its application, which not only stopped the development from moving forward, but prevented Hull from reaping the financial benefits of selling capacity. Member Sean Cunning said that left the two towns on bad terms, and he isn't sure making any kind of deal with Hull will be within the capacity of the board at this time.

In addition, even if connections to Hull were sought, Kasperowicz said the previous costs which were going to be charged to Jerusalem Road Estates were "extremely steep," and added he believed that cost did not include the installation of pipes in the street. "That price may have changed," he said, but added from what he has heard from officials in Hull, they may favor giving capacity to private developers who can pay the fees over another town that can't. He said it would be his preference to see the homes look into capacity at the central plant first, but added they will have to wait until after the scheduled homes are connected, which may not be completed until 2009.

Even without all proposed hook-ups completed, Kasperowicz said there is much trouble with infiltration and inflow, which means water is leaking into the pipes from the outside, and is causing the plant to take in more water on wet days that it is permitted for. He said if all the leaks were fixed, there could be enough capacity to hook up more homes, but at the root of all the problems is a lack of funding.

Private residences are not the only ones looking to tie-in to the town's sewer. The proposed 105-unit Cedarmere senior housing project was denied sewer access by the commission based on capacity concerns. However, Cedarmere has filed a suit against the town, stating capacity does exist and that theirs is a no-impact proposal for the town, and should be granted sewer access. Northland Residential, the developers the town is working with to build multi-unit senior housing on the Cook site, was also denied access to town sewer. Developers for Avalon, the proposed 200-unit project off Route 3A, have filed a motion to intervene or join with the Cedarmere lawsuit, in an effort to preserve its right to sewer access.

Over the past two years, the Sewer Commission, along with Town Manager Mark Haddad, the Board of Health, and members of Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions, or CEES, have been working together to continue the preliminary design of the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue Sewer Expansion effort, as approved at the 2002 Annual Town Meeting. The sewer extension will help eliminate private on-site wastewater disposal systems, which are negatively impacting the water quality of Inner Little Harbor, Little Harbor, and Massachusetts Bay, resulting in the closure of area shellfish beds. It is intended to expand the wastewater treatment plant's capacity by 150,000 gallons per day, to allow the "Little Harbor Sewer District" and "Atlantic Avenue Sewer District" to be connected to the existing municipal sewer system.

Funding was approved at the annual Town Meeting this March for phase two of the project, which includes costs associated with design and permitting. Construction costs are being deferred until a later date. When completed, the project will fulfill the last requirement of the Second Amended Final Judgment, which is a state requirement Cohasset needs to fulfill as a result of its violating the Clean Water Act in 1975. Through the first judgment and an amended second judgment, the town has been required to undertake a number of sewer projects, including building a sewer system in North Cohasset and expand the sewer system in central Cohasset. To date, 22 homes out of 325 have not been hooked up in the North Cohasset district and between 20 and 40 still remain to be connected in the central district.

about going over there."

Ford said Langham was very well liked by his peers. "He treated everyone with respect," Ford says.

Langham's high school wrestling coach echoed Ford's remarks.

"He was one of the last kids that would say 'yes coach,'" says Torin Sweeney. "He was one of my all-time favorites – he was very respectful and worked extremely hard to be the best athlete he could be.

"He was a super kid and it's a tragic loss," he said.

Langham enjoyed a good time, but he also had a serious side. When asked "What do you see yourself doing 10 years from now?" following graduation in June 2001, Langham told the Mariner "at a law firm or in sports medicine" — while some classmates quipped they would be ,"independently wealthy" or "successful with a good-looking wife."

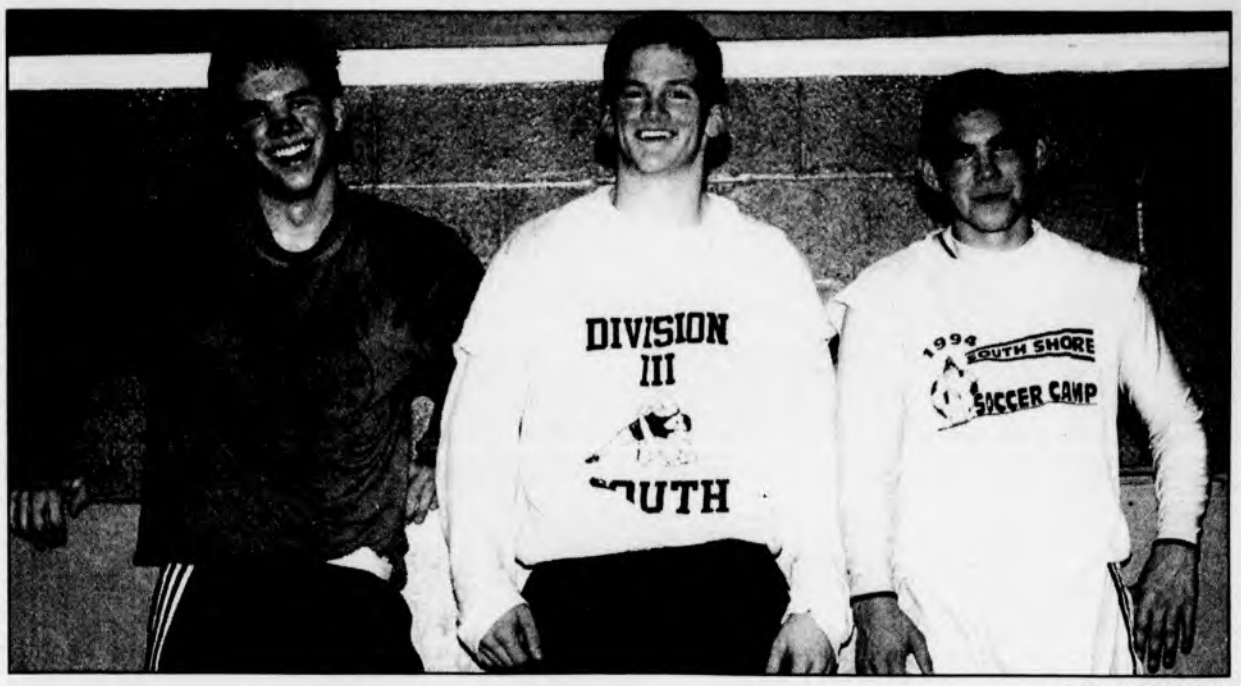
Aryanna Afshar, who was another classmate of Langham's, described him as someone who always put others first.

"When I had my wisdom teeth out, he was the first one at the door with flowers," she recalls. "And that was minimal. He would drop everything to do something for someone else.

"No matter what you could always rely on him. He had such a good heart," Afshar says. "He was a great friend and a great person."

Doug O'Brien, who is also studying abroad, sent an email from Rome Italy, about Langham, whom he described as "one of my best friends that I've ever had the pleasure of knowing."

"Justin was a winner in life – a real class act," O'Brien says. "When we would hang out at his house on the weekends, Justin never turned a person away… he would always welcome everyone with open arms.



"Although his life was cut tragically short, he lived life to the fullest," O'Brien said. "He did so much for a man who was about to turn 21 this June. He lived in New York and Massachusetts and traveled the world, made lifelong friends, and studied in Washington, England and Scotland….He was a man so content with himself and full of life."

Kelly Lordan said the yearbook survey showed 72 percent of the class had been to Langham's basement.

"However, this figure doesn't include many of the students in the Class of 2002 whose friendship Justin valued," she says.

Lordan recalled the senior prank when the class placed scores of the desks in the first floor of the high school in the courtyard and took out all the tables in the cafeteria.

"Although many people in our class participated in the prank, Justin was the one who Mr. DeLorenzo called at 5 in the morning to help clean it up," Lordan says. "Younger students appreciated this because they had a two-hour delay of school."

Studying in the master's program in English literature and economics at the University of Glasgow, Langham was an alumni of the Oxford Tutorial College in Oxford, England. At Cohasset High, he was an AP (advanced placement) Scholar of Distinction and recipient of the Latin cum laude award. He was a member of the Cohasset and Coveleigh Club swim teams and the Cohasset Sailing Club. While in high school, he was also a volunteer with the Appalachia Service Club, which is a home building ministry led by the Rev. Gary Ritts and his wife, Judy of the Second Congregational Church. Langham played lacrosse at both Oxford and Glasgow universities.

Langham's friends praised his parents, Kazue and Steve Langham of Pond Street, saying how they were the ones who gave their son his personality and genuine attitude.

"Mr. and Mrs. Langham should be very proud of Justin because he touched the lives on many of his classmates," Lordan says.

Andi Shaughnessy said Langham moved to town when they were in the fifth grade and he soon made an impact. She said Langham did all he could to make other people happy.

"He definitely defined what a friend should be," Shaughnessy says.

A special memorial service for Langham will be held at the Second Congregational Church in mid-July.

Playoff hopes dim for lady laxers with loss to Falmouth

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The postseason hopes of the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team took a palpable hit, Tuesday afternoon, when Falmouth walked out of town on the right side of a14-10 decision.

The loss dropped the Lady Skippers to 2-6 on the season 10 games remaining, and certainly appeared to greatly imperil the program's modest two year post-season streak.

"Yeah, this one really hurt," conceded third year coach Torin Sweeney. "We put ourselves in a hole, dug our way out and then gave up the last four goals. It was very frustrating for all of us."

In between the slow start and late collapse, the Lady Skippers played like world beaters, outscoring the visiting Skippers 10-6 in the meat of the game…not that it mattered for much.

When the Lady Skippers fell to 2-4 at this time a week ago, Sweeney talked about a block of "winnable games" coming up. This home match-up with Falmouth was high up on that list.

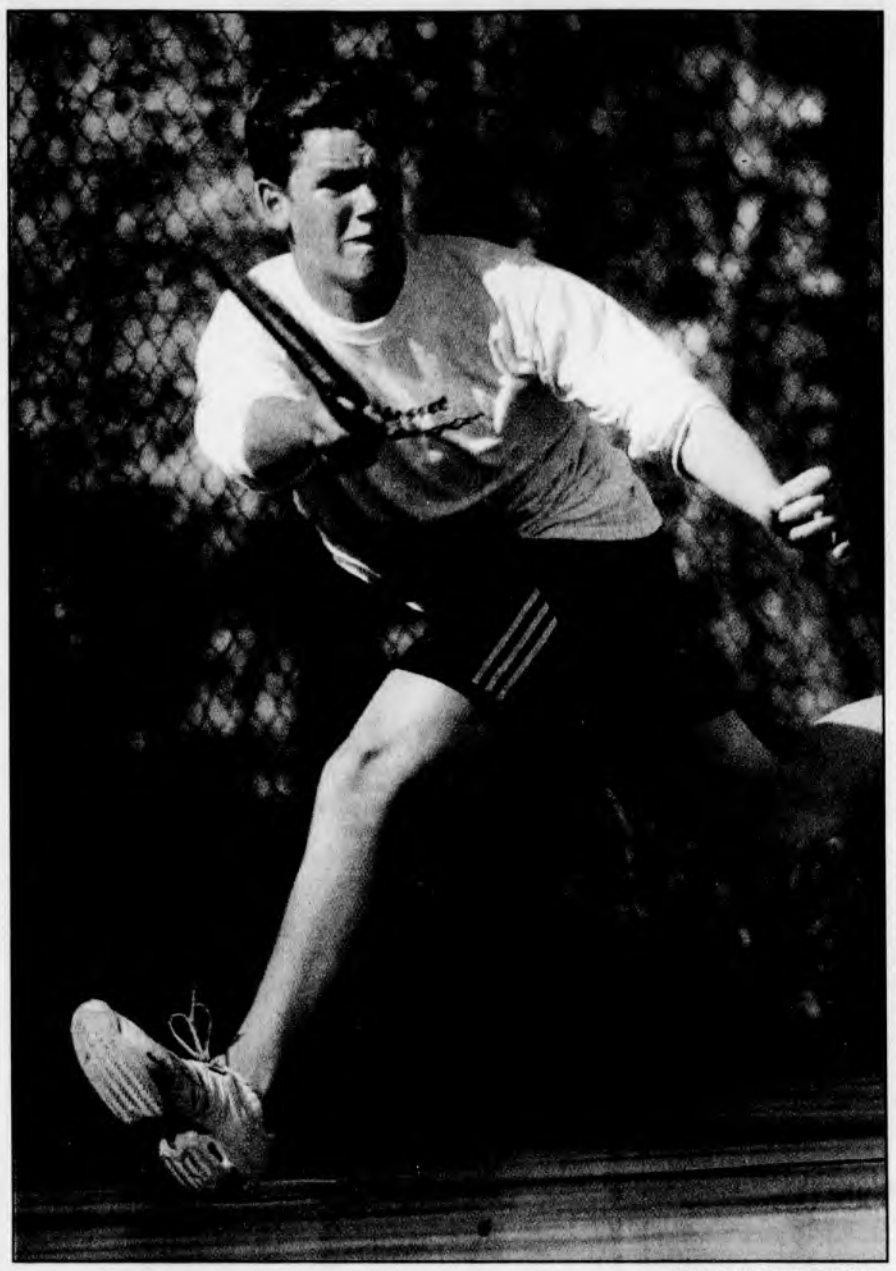
"I'd like to say we have some more winnable games coming up, but that's the same thing I was thinking about this one," the coach admitted. "We're putting it together in spurts, but we're having trouble sustaining anything."

The Skippers surrendered the game's first four goals on Tuesday, but scraped back to cut that deficit to 8-6 at half.

A quick 3-1 burst to open the second half, led by Nicole Turgiss (five goals), tied the game at 9-9. Falmouth re-took the lead midway through the half, but Cohasset answered right back to tie the score again.

The game then ended the same way it started: with the Clippers ripping off four unanswered goals.

"We're not giving up at all," insisted Sweeney. "We have some problems, obviously, but we're going to back out there (Wednesday) in practice trying to figure out what we can before we play Marshfield (tonight at home). We've got to find a way to solve some of these things. There's still a lot of lacrosse left to play."



These efforts will be complicated by a number of injuries that have hit over the last few games.

Key senior defender Kristen Reardon was lost to an injury in an 18-8 loss to powerhouse Norwell (7-1) last week, and does not appear likely to return soon. Fast emerging sophomore defender Miranda Lanzilotti has also been playing limited minutes as she battles through an injury.

These injuries add to the leadership and experience void at the defensive end already created by the season long loss of senior captain Libby Meikleham (torn ACL).

Growing pains

Boys tennis team suffers through pangs of youth

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There are few things more exciting to a high school coach than young talent.

The flip-side of that coin, though, is that, often, there are few things more frustrating.

How a player can look so good one minute and so bad the next…this is a question that can plague even a well seasoned mentor like Cohasset High boys tennis coach Kent Parrot.

Indeed, Parrot seemed almost at a loss to explain how his team lost to South Shore League rival Harwich last Wednesday at home by a 3-2 score.

"Losses like this bring home the fact you're dealing with younger athletes," said Parrot. "There are going to be bad days and there are going to be good days. The Harwich match was just a case of a few players having one of those bad days. Next match, they might be great, and someone else has an out of body experience."

The loss at first singles wasn't completely unexpected, as sophomore Dan Sullivan fell in straight sets to senior Craig Druschella (5-0), arguably the top player in the league, 6-3, 6-4.

"To be honest, I thought Danny played extremely well," said Parrot. "Druschella can

Clash of the titans

Cohasset tops Norwell in girls tennis showdown for first place in SSL

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset and Norwell are considered to be two of the best girls tennis programs in the South Shore, and both squads y showed why last Thursday.

In what will likely be the only true competition either team will see in the league, Cohasset took four out of the five closely contested matches for the victory.

The day featured a marquee match between two of the top singles players in the state, Cohasset's Liz Stone and Norwell's Angie Bizzozero. Although the match went 6-2, 6-1 in favor of Stone, both girls played extremely well in a match that featured many long points.

Both coaches said it was probably the best match they had seen the two play against one another.

"That match was closer than the score indicated," said Cohasset head coach Gigi Meehan. "Angie played very well today."

Norwell head coach Derek Sulc said it could only be a good experience for his best player to square off against a player of Stone's caliber.

"She showed the ability to frustrate that type of player, and to make her work a lot harder than she usually has to," Sulc said. "It was a good sign to see Angie play that well against her."

Two of the more entertaining matches of the day came in number three singles and number one doubles. The Clippers notched their point in the former, with Taylor Cleaves defeating Cohasset's Rachel Garber, 7-5, 6-3. The Skippers team of Courtney Caron and Chelsea Grossman took a tough match over Kathryn Anker and Carly Arena, 6-4 and 6-3.

Both matches featured strong first-set comebacks. Cleaves found herself down 3-0 and 4-1, but came back with a variety of drop shots and strong baseline winners. Garber broke her opponent's serve to go up 5-3, but the Norwell sophomore responded by taking four straight games for the set.

Both girls worked very hard in the second set, but Cleaves appeared to get stronger as the match wore on and earned the win.

"She has been building a lot of confidence as a player," Sulc said. "She's learning to play against different types of players. Her confidence definitely built, with this being her first time playing that kind of opponent."

In number one doubles, Caron and Grossman were down 4-2 in the first set, but also wound up winning four games in a row to take the first set. Meehan said

Triumphant return

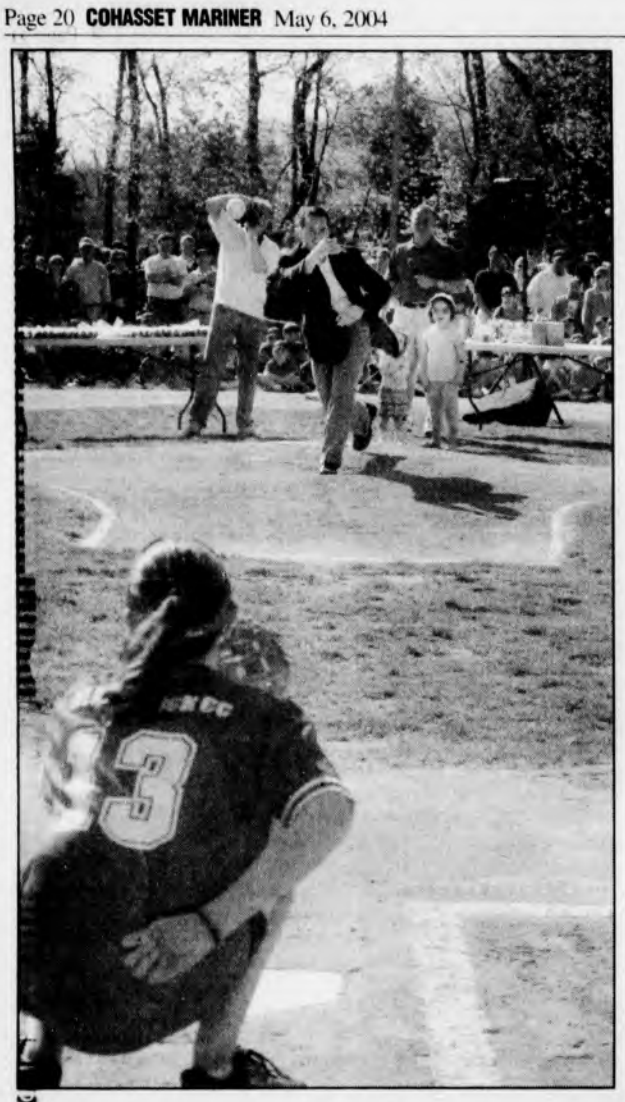
Rasmussen comes off DL to lift Cohasset laxmen past Norwell, 8-7

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Stu Curran figured it would take a while for Mike Rasmussen to settle back into the Cohasset High lacrosse mix, and he was right.

It took the senior sniper almost a whole half to emerge as the Skipperrs' go to guy.

Getting his first taste of athletic activity in almost two months, Rasmussen scored his first three goals of the season in the second half of Friday's showdown with Norwell to help the Skippers storm back from a three goal halftime deficit to send the game into overtime. And then, with a minute left in the second OT period, Rasmussen netted the gamewinner, firing home a high wrister as he circled out from behind the net on an isolation play drawn up specifically for him.



"That just shows you what kind of offensive player Mike is and how much he means to our team," said Curran, the Skippers first year head coach. "He was literally back from the doctor the day of the game with a note that cleared him (to play). There was a little rust to scrape off, and he was really dragging at times, but he'll get better as the season goes on. He is perhaps our top offensive player. He has a unique ability to put the ball in the net, and he also makes good things hap-

Major League baseball roundup

With the advent of spring starts a Cohasset tradition, the CYBSA parade and opening week of the baseball season Great baseball action took place last week against the backdrop of beautiful spring weather.

The Majors, as baseball aficionados know, are seven teams of 10, 11 and 12 year olds, veterans and rookies alike. Several games were played last week, all with memorable moments and highlights.

Athletics

Going 3-0 for the week, the A's had some decisive wins and a great come from behind, bottom of the 6th win over the tough hitting Red Sox. With men on first and second, and two outs, new A's rookie John Plant delivered a base hit allowing the tying run to score, an overthrow by the Sox allowed the winning run to score. It truly was déjà vu all over again, reminiscent of the A's championship win against the Red Sox last year. Other highlights include strong pitching by Brendan Doonan against the Pirates and Mike Monaco against the Dodgers.

Rangers

The Rangers split their games last week, losing a close one to the Cardinals and playing solidly for a win versus the Dodgers. In the loss to the Cardinals rookie Christian Allard gave up only one run in his major league pitching debut. Against the Dodgers, the pitching tandem of Graham Stevenson and Eamon Davis held the Dodgers to two hits in their decisive win. Rookie Eric Wassel was strong at the plate with a double and two RBI's.

Red Sox

The Red Sox won two of their three games last week. Victories against the Pirates and the Mets were the highlights of the week. Key action includes a big hit by Pete McKenna vs. the Pirates. Jeff Cavanaro was solid on the mound delivering six strikeouts in three innings. This first week of the season, Red Sox play was, focused on teamwork and smart baseball, something to watch for the rest of the season.

Mets

In their second season in the majors, the Mets had two wins and a loss to the Red Sox last week. Sunday's game was a rainout versus the Pirates.

Hard hitting was the name of the Mets' games last week with three home runs. Slugger Robbie McCunney hit two out of the park, and 11 year old rookie Max MacCleave had one HR, three doubles and six RBI's against the Rangers. Impressive pitching by 10-year-old rookie Drew Cobin versus the Dodgers led the Mets, to a solid win.

Pirates

The Pirates had a tough week losing their first two games. In the first matchup against the Red Sox, Austin Meyer was strong defensively at short stop, creating key plays to keep the game exciting. In the second match up against the A's, veteran Tom Buckley pitched a solid game against the hard hitting opponents. Chris Hayes was team player of the game for his force out at home with the bases loaded and his strong hitting at the plate.

Cardinals

The Cardinals had a strong week, beating both the Dodgers and the Rangers in exciting, big league caliber games. In the win versus the Rangers, Ben Campbell pitched four shutout innings with nine strikeouts. In the play of the game, the Dodgers had the bases loaded and Dan Sullivan for the Cardinals made a great catch in left field and threw a one hop home to end the game. Rookie 10 year old Patrick Kearney, in his first major league start got the win against the Dodgers in a close 12-10 victory. Veteran John Kearney had his first out of the park home run. Kevin O'Connell picked up the save in both games.

Dodgers

The Dodgers fell short this week, losing their three opening contests. Despite strong pitching by Jay Salerno and relief pitcher Tyler Judge, the blue and white offensive unit struggled at the plate versus the A's. The matchup with the Cardinals was truly a battle, with tremendous offensive action. Veteran Chris Brown led the charge at the plate with solid hitting.

CHS baseball team losing streak reaches four

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The losing streak of the Cohasset High baseball team reached four on Tuesday, as they fell to South Shore League rival Hull on the road in lopsided fashion, 16-6.

The Skippers actually took a 6-5 lead in the top of the fourth, but Hull's Sean Smolinsky came on in relief at that point and shut down the visitors from that point forward.

The Pirate bats came to life after that, led by five players with multiple hits. Pat Good went 4-for-4 off Skippers pitchers, and teammates Bill Alexander, Justin Albert and Chris Feo all had three hits apiece for Hull (7-3,4-2).

Cohasset junior Louis Blanco went 2-for-4 and played a strong defensive game behind the plate.

The Skippers fell to 3-6 (2-6 in SSL play) wit hthe loss, three games under the magic .500, the minimum requirement for post-season qualification.

An 18-2 loss to league leading Norwell (7-1, 7-0) last Friday preceded this loss.

The boys were slated to get back to it today with a trip to Abington (3:30 p.m.), then travel to Carver today and host South Shore Christian on Tuesday (3:30 p.m. start).

Clash of the titans

afterwards it was simply a matter of the duo's mentality and confidence in themselves that sparked the turnaround.

Anker and Arena had a little comeback of their own in the second set. Down 5-1, they held and broke serve to pull within two games. The ensuing game went to back and forth between deuce and advantage for both teams, but Caron and Grossman were just a little stronger in the end.

In number two singles, Cohasset's Holly Graham defeated Jenna Wright, 6-1 and 6-3. The Skippers' Corey Evans and Emilie Sullivan beat Norwell's junior duo of MacKenzie Shute and Alexandra Dalferro in number two doubles, 6-4 and 6-1. In both cases, the score did not necessarily indicate the quality of the match, as each provided plenty of long points.

At the end of the day, however, it was Cohasset who took the battle of league undefeateds. They improved to 5-1 overall, 3-0 in the league. Norwell dropped to 4-2, with a league record of 4-1.

Triumphant return

pen at the offensive end. He was dearly missed while he was out."

Rasmussen suffered a broken wrist this winter during the CHS hockey team's quarterfinals loss to Bourne back on March 2 and had been prohibited from taking part in any sports related contact until Friday. So he made his 2004 debut against Norwell.

"Yeah, lucky us," deadpanned Norwell High head coach Jay Williams. "Rasmussen made a big difference for them, but he wasn't the only one who killed us. (Cohasset longstickman) Conor Buick did as good a job of shutting down Kris Tedeschi as anyone I've ever seen, and Cohasset's defense in general was very good, including (goalie) Nick Murphy. He made some big saves that let that game get to overtime."

The Cohasset defense did what no team has come even close to doing this season, it prevented both of Norwell's vaunted attackmen, seniors Tedeschi and Terry Smallcomb, from scoring a single goal. Tedeschi did chip in with three assists, but the athletically gifted Smallcomb was held completely off the board.

Of course, Norwell's defensive players are no slouches either, particularly in the early going.

With Rasmussen struggling to get his legs under him, the host Clippers took a quick lead and carried a 5-1 advantage into the waning minutes of the first half.

Norwell midfielders Terence Bohan and Mike Coleman each potted a pair of first half scores and sophomore Andrew O'Donnell was good for a solo tally. Meanwhile, a first quarter goal by Cohasset senior captain DeWayne Morris was all the Skippers offense had to show for its efforts through the game's first 15 minutes.

CHS sophomore middie Trevor Brady finally ended the draught with six minutes to go in the half, making it a 5-2 game, but that is where it would remain. Norwell senior netminder Mike Prescott saw to that with a couple of outstanding saves in one-on-one situations inside the final two minutes.

Rasmussen sparked the Skippers resurgence in the second half as he scored two during a 4-0 third quarter run to help his team its first lead at 6-5. Senior Mark Davis and junior Jake Previte had the other goals.

"Cohasset just outplayed us in the third quarter, plain and simple," said Williams. "We couldn't get anything going, but their play in the midfield and defensively had a lot to do with that."

Norwell junior middie Myles Clancy tied the game early in the fourth quarter with a terrific solo effort, as he scooped up a loose ball near midfield and charged in hard on net, finally firing off a diving shot from 10-yards out that beat Murphy low.

The Clippers were put back out in front with eight minutes to play, as Bohan finished off his hat trick on a feed from sophomore Scott Chappell.

The ubiquitous game of inches angle was added to the game story when the snakebitten Tedeschi rang a shot off the Cohasset crossbar with just under three minutes to play, and the long carom resulted in a break the other way that resulted in Cohasset junior John Durkin netting the equalizer with 2:20 left in regulation.

Norwell had the best scoring opportunity to score in the first overtime period, but a one-on-one rush on Murphy saw a shot sail just wide of the cage.

With one man marking up on him as the second overtime approached the final minute, Rasmussen took a pass behind Prescott on the left, circled straight out on net and fired a bad angle lefty shot from five yards out that found twine just inside the top far corner.

"That might have looked like kind of a lucky shot, but Mike has a way of making those on a pretty regular basis," asserted Curran. "He's a good shooter. I've seen enough of him indoors to know he's something of a pure scorer. That's just one of the things he brings back to our team."

Marshfield 8, Cohasset 3

The difference in this one was the Skippers simply could not win the possession battles with last year's Div. 2 Eastern Mass finalists.

The scoring was done by Rqasmussen, Morris and junior Jake Kovach, as the Skippers fel lto 3-5 on the season (2-4 in Pilgrim Conference).

The Rams outshot the host Skippers, 28-18. Cohasset goalie Nick Murphy played well, making 12 saves. Marshfield's returning All-American goalie, Todd Faiella, made 11 saves, including a handful of beauties just before the halftime break that helped keep the Rams in control.

"Marshfield is just playing very good lacrosse right now, and we didn't match up with them very well," said Curran. "I thought we had some guys who played well. We've got to put that loss behind us, though, and move forward."

Next up

It doesn't get any easier for the Skippers, as they travel to Hingham tomorrow afternoon to take on the perennial state power Harbormen (3:30 p.m. start), the first of four consecutive road games. They'll be at Hanover next Tuesday and Sandwich a week from today. They'll then take a ferry to Nantucket for a Saturday afternoon game.

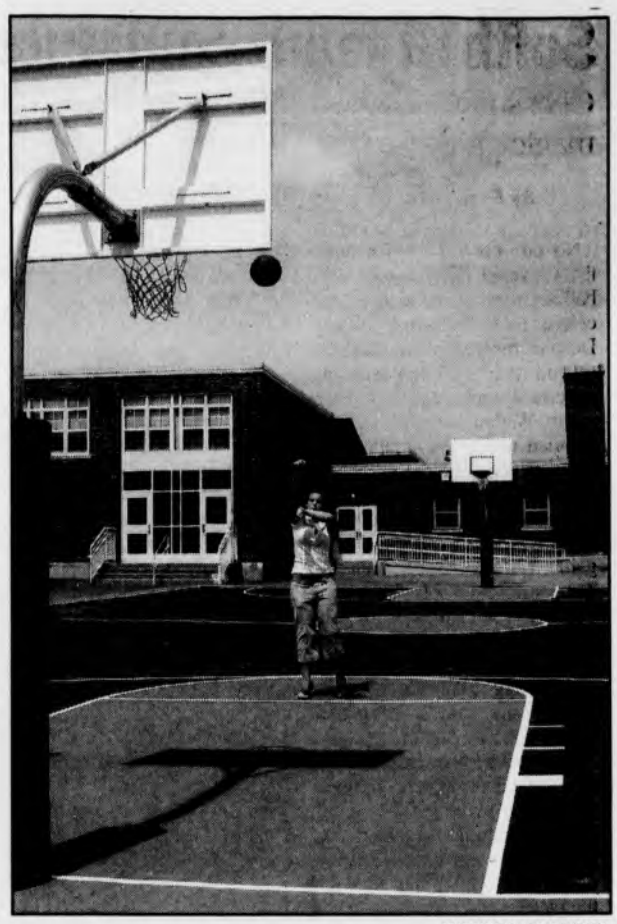
Second annual Lacrosse Fundraiser

Thanks for your support last year. The first year J.V. program (funded by your donations) was a great success and enabled all the players to get real game playing time and improve their skills. The added experience has significantly helped last years' J.V. players at the varsity level this year.

Given the limitations in the school budget, again must fund the boys and girls J.V. lax program at the high school. The Boosters have committed to provide $8,500 to the 2004 J.V. for coaches, travel and referees. The athletic department has scheduled approximately 10 games each for both the boys and girls J.V. squads.



The CHS lacrosse players are selling booklets with coupons from local merchants. The booklets, with many coupons, are the same price as last year - $20. The value of the coupons total more than $200. Each player is asked to sell a minimum of 10 packets each.

The Lacrosse Boosters deeply appreciate contributing merchants - Atlantica, The Red Lion Inn, Bernard's and The Village Butcher and Deli. The booklet includes coupons for Papa Gino's, DiNero's, Fridays, Applebee's, Chilis, Six Flags New England, and Jiffy Lube (go Nick).

As a boosters group, feel that the strength of any student athletic program lies in its younger players. Without a strong youth and JV program, the varsity will suffer in the end. How many know of younger high school players who have had to sit on the sidelines, game after game, year after year, having minimal game time and coaching. Skills are not polished, interest is diminished, and over time, the program becomes less strong. JV gives the kids more play time, more experience, more coaching, and builds confidence and self esteem.

These are economically stressful times for many, but with these coupon books ($20 for $200 + value) you are getting "such a deal." The lacrosse program in Cohasset has grown by leaps and bounds. Hope to always be here to support the sport and guarantee each child - every child - the many and not the few the opportunity to play and learn.

Softball team continues to surprise

CHS squad reaches magic .500 mark

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

No one could have imagined the Cohasset High varsity softball team would face five cancelled games in one month. Despite the funky weather, the second year program has produced a 4-4 record.

Last Wednesday, the Skippers traveled to Clipper country and faced Norwell for the second time this year. Having beaten the Clippers, 21-12, in their previous meeting, the girls went into this game with plenty of confidence. This time, a comfortable 12-5 win reflected their poise.

Sophomore pitcher Katie James spoke about the game.

"We made only two errors this game," she said. "We played wonderfully as a team."

Katie did her part by pitching a solid five innings and going 2-for-3 at the plate.

Rachael Doyle best supported Katie with a sturdy game at second base and by going 3-for-4 at the plate.

Sophomore Melissa Crowley-Buck added some razzle-dazzle with a diving catch in left field in the top of the sxith inning.

The good times came to a screeching halt the very next day. With sluggish bats and numerous errors, Cohasset fell 9-2 to Holbrook.

Coach Deb Bostwick reflected on this road game. "We hit horribly and played very average defense. On the contrary, Virginia Spofford and Christina Pinkus pitched respectably. Unfortunately, we got going way too late."

The Skippers went hitless for the first four innings. Still, all in all, this game appeared to be a big improvement from the Skippers 24-8 loss to Holbrook last spring.

Senior Caitlin Condon agreed with her coaches views.

"Our hitting held us back," she Condon, who has played softball since the fifth grade but insists she has never come across a team as close knit this one. "Overall, the team as a whole seems to be doing just fine."

Speaking of close, the Skippers battle with Carver on Saturday came down to the last out of the game.

With a two run advantage, two strikes on the Carver batter and two outs, the Skippers seemed to have this bout in the bag. Crusader Danielle Spillane, however, saw the game as anything but over. Down to her team's last strike, Spillane cranked a double, giving Carver the come from behind victory.

Aside from the last pitch, freshmen Christina Pinkus played an "incomparably outstanding game," according to Coach Bostwick. Along with her fiery left arm, Christina got on base three of her four times up at bat.

Freshmen Laura Campadelli and Katie James each contributed 2 RBIs. Rachael Doyle also made a difference by banging out a fifth inning double to knock in three runs

The superior catching from Casey Anderson and steadfast fielding by Danielle Pinkus at shortstop capped the Skipper defense.

Apart from the final score, the Skippers exhibited big improvements in contrast to last year's face-off with the Crusaders. This year, the Skippers struck out eight fewer times, connected on three more hits, and drove in 10 more runs.

Coach Deb Bostwick feels pretty good about this season's turnout to date. She plans to focus on the Skippers ability to hit faster pitches in upcoming practices. This should not be a difficult task with the new Freedom Field, AKA Field of Dreams, available for use. The town will look to see if April showers brings some May flowers for the Skippers.

Growing pains

make people look bad, but Dan really showed a lot of poise by hanging tough and battling back, especially in the second set."

Brendan Michaud lost a tough match at third singles to a player his coach called a "human backboard."

"That third kid from Harwich doesn't dazzle you, but he just keeps sending everything back," said Parrot.

The Cohasset wins were provided by sophomore Nils Sceery-- who made quick work of his second singles counterpart, 6-2, 6-0—and by the second doubles team of Chris Donze and Kyle Dattola.

This left the match to the first doubles team senior Andrew Wise and sophomore Chris Pescatore, a spot Parrot thought he had an advantage. It didn't turn out that way, as the top Harwich duo took a straight sets decision to secure the team win.

"Let's just say it wasn't Andrew and Chris' best day," said the CHS coach. "They realize that, though, and that's the important thing,. I think you'll see them really go after that Harwich team when we play down there (next Thursday)."

Had this Cohasset pair played with anywhere near the sense of purpose in a three set tiebreak loss to Norwell's unbeaten top duo of Chris Pisarkiewicz and Kyle Swartz, last Thursday, Parrot asserts they would have "beaten the Harwich team in straight sets, and pretty quickly too."

Despite falling 5-0 to the 10-time defending South Shore League champion Clippers, Parrot sounded pretty pleased with the way his charges played across the board in that one.

"Norwell's a veteran team, and we're a predominantly younger team," said Parrot. "We had some players perform much better than they did in our first loss this season to Norwell. Really, I thought all of the matches were competitive. There were performances there we can build on."

The coach has particular praise for the way Sceery stepped up his game against Norwell's number two, Ryan Sweeney. Sweeney dominated the CHS sophomore in their first meeting, 6-2, 6-0, but Sceery played two tough, long sets this tiem around before falling, 6-4, 7-5.

Next Up

These two losses dropped the Skippers to 4-3 on the season, one game over the magic .500 mark needed for postseason qualification.

The boys saw their scheduled home meet with SSL rival Mashpee on Monday postponed due to rain. They're slated to get back at it today at Abington against the SSL rival Green Wave, then travel to Carver on Monday for another league match and then to Cape Cod Tech on Wednesday for a non-leaguer.

This one hurts

but we're just not getting many breaks right now," continued Sweeney. "We've got some girls out with injury, and a few others who are playing hurt. The problem with that is we're just not a very deep team. I've been forced to play a lot of freshman and JV players lately. They're giving all they have, but some of them really aren't ready."

The coach did praise the work of sophomores Kathy Rosano, who scored a goal on Tuesday, and Mia Lieb Lappen, as well as freshman Colleen Richardson, who essentially filled in for the injured Reardon.

He also noted that senior captain Ashley Faber continues to be a force at both ends of the field and that Turgiss (team best 23 goals) is doing a nice job of shouldering the offensive load

Next up

After tonight's meeting with Marshfield (6:30 p.m. at Alumni Field), the girls will host Barnstable next Tuesday (5 p.m. start) and then travel to Cape Cod Academy on Wednesday.

Woman's story about her road to wellness is magnetic

Will share her experiences at talk

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Just over one year ago, Carole Siegal's dream was to be healthy and strong enough to be able to walk to the end of her street and back. She was weak, lethargic, and felt years beyond her chronological age. She had so much trouble making it up the stairs, she and her husband had to move to a one-level condo, and she was only 52 years old. But today, that woman no longer exists and Siegal says she has never felt better.

After 26 years of surgery, illness, and a total lack of energy, Siegal is singing the praises of new non-toxic, non-invasive wellness technologies from the Nikken company, which she says have allowed her to take back her life. She drinks pure "living" water, which has been filtered and ionized to balance its PH levels as well as infused with oxygen. She is constantly using magnet therapy either through daytime products such as shoe insoles or a magnetic necklace, or at night in the magnet sleep system she uses. She even takes advantage of far-infrared technology, which she said is like harnessing the energy of the sun to promote natural warmth and heat the body from the inside out.

"It is absolutely fantastic," she said of her turnaround, and is so thrilled that she has begun spreading the word about the products she has been using. To that end, she will be sharing the story of her recovery during a free educational workshop May 18 and 20 at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and all are welcome to attend.

Siegal has a very rare hereditary condition called von Hippel-Lindau disease, which causes her body to produce tumors. While she is lucky in the sense that her tumors have all been benign, it is essential each one be removed because there is always the chance one will turn malignant. As a result, Siegal has been through 13 major operations at Massachusetts General Hospital, which has in turn resulted in 25 years of physical therapy.

Siegel's health problems date back to 1978, when she was diagnosed with the first of two brain tumors. She said she was actually the first person ever to have radiation treatments on her brain stem at Mass General. As a result of that and a second round of radiation and surgery for an additional brain tumor, her balance was affected and she developed tinnitus, or ringing in the ears.

After the surgeries, Siegal was put on Prednisone, but only for roughly 10 days after each surgery. However, in that short timeframe, the drug did tremendous damage to her bones. Siegal developed osteonecrosis, which literally means, "bone death," which caused her to need eight hip replacement surgeries — five on one side, three on the other — as well as both shoulders replaced.

"I was in a wheelchair for a while, and I had to learn to walk again," said Siegal, adding it was very tough because her balance was affected even more due to the hip replacements.

Along with her brain, hip and shoulder surgeries, Siegal also had surgery on two eye tumors and her kidneys, "and through all of it, I felt very tired," she said.

But last summer, Siegal's neighbor, nutritionist Patricia Messing-Hague, who is a consultant for the Nikken company, saw her at a barbecue and could tell she was having health problems. She invited Siegal to come to her house to take a look at some new wellness technologies. "I was very open to it and thought, 'well, nothing can hurt, let's just try it'," Siegal said. Because Siegal wasn't well enough to make the short trip to Messing-Hague's house, she went to Siegal.

The first change Siegal made was starting to drink "living" water, which is purified, then sent through an "optimizer" which infuses it with oxygen. Siegal was also given a magnetic massager with two small magnetic balls on the end, which began to help with some of her shoulder pain. At the same time, Siegal ordered some magnetic insoles for her husband, who had suffered from leg cramps due to poor circulation for years, to see what, if any, affect it would have on him.

A few days later, Messing-Hague came back with a magnetic sleep system for Siegal. The sleep-system, which includes a magnetic mattress, which somewhat resembles a foam egg-crate mattress pad but is dotted with magnets throughout, a magnetic comforter made from far-infrared fabric, and a magnet-laden pillow. "I didn't know what my husband was going to think, but I got into bed and slept like a log," she said. She also continued to drink the water, and admits that while she had struggled drinking enough regular water before, she liked the "living" water.

Siegal's husband had tremendous success with his shoe inserts, and his leg cramps went away, so she bought a pair for herself. The result: the problems she had experienced with balance went away. She said in the past, if she had ever needed to walk alone across a ballroom floor, she would have been nervous her equilibrium would fail her, but now, as long as she has her sole inserts in place, balance is not a problem.

"This is the best I've felt in 25 years, thanks to my neighbor Pat," Siegal said, adding she feels great and her doctors can't believe it. She has been able to travel to Europe and California, and said by bringing various forms of magnet therapy as well as a water bottle filled with living water with her, she did not experience jet lag.

"When I walk around, no one would know how sick I've been," said Siegal, and she has no doubt the wellness technologies she has been using are the reason why. She said she believes so much in the products, she, like Messing-Hague, has become a consultant to sell the products from the Nikken company, and hopes by spreading the word about her recovery, she can help others.

Carole Siegal will be giving her personal testimony during an educational workshop at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Tuesday, May 18 from 7-8 p.m. and Thursday, May 20 from 1-2 p.m. The workshop is free and open to everyone. For more information, please call Patricia Messing-Hague at (781) 383-2410 or visit the Nikken company web site at www.nikken.com.

Community Garden Club flower show May 12 and 13

Next week's Flower Show is turning into an event not to be missed. Imagine being able to walk though out Cohasset's new library looking at floral arrangements by some of the most accomplished and talented arrangers on the South Shore and then moving on into the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum and seeing art exhibited by equally talented South Shore artists.

In fact, in the Museum there will be three separate art activities being held at the same time and place. One is a contest for art to be used in a gardening book, the second is a show at which artists will be displaying and selling their paintings, and the third is face painting for the children who accompany their parents. In addition, there will be a silent auction, a plant sale, a bake sale, and a white elephant table.

All of these events represent the ongoing desire of the members of the members to share their talent and that of the community's artists with the greater Cohasset community and their children. Flowers are one of nature's most colorful and beautiful contributions to our daily lives. Master flower arrangers rearrange nature's color in breathtaking and unexpected ways and artists spend hours capturing and preserving forever nature's beauty on canvas or paper.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library and Our World Children◊s Discovery Museum is open to the public. Free admission on Wednesday, May 12, and Thursday, May 13, from noon to 5 p.m.. Call 781-545-4395 or 781-383-2486 for more information.

This lovely botanical illustration by Peggy Daniels is just one example of the beautiful nature related paintings by many local artists that make the art exhibition at the Flower Show so unique and special.

Cohasset PSO to host live tele-a-thon/talent show

Each year, the Cohasset Parent School Organization volunteers make more than 750 phone calls as part of an annual phone contribution drive. This year, the phone drive will take on a different and more exciting approach. The PSO will be hosting the first-ever televised Cohasset PSO Tele-A-Thon to be held live on local Comcast Cable Channel 10 Wednesday, May 12, from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. Families can call the toll-free phone number, 1-800-760-8989, to pledge tax deductible contributions to support programs that the Cohasset PSO funds annually.

The Cohasset PSO Tele-a-thon is similar to the WGBH annual tele-a-thon drive, except that instead of items for auction, the PSO will be raffling many items at different pledge levels. Once you phone in your tax deductible contribution, your name will be entered into raffle drawing(s) based on your level of pledging. Winners will be drawn live on TV at the end of the evening (8:30 p.m. - 9 p.m.). In order for your name to be entered into the raffles, all pledges will have to be received by 8:30 p.m. sharp. Here are just a few items:

For a $100 Pledge (You can win any of these items):

Two Mainstream sit-on-top Kayaks (over $650 value)

One week of MAXLAX Camp (value: $600)

$300.00 Cohasset Sailing Club Membership with a Sweatshirt

Bose Wave Radio w/ CD (value: $500)

One week free vacation Condo rental in Okemo (sleeps four, value : $1500)

Also includes all items listed for $75, $50 and $25

For a $75 Pledge (You can win any of these items):

Two New England Patriot Tickets- 2004-2005 season

Two Boston Red Sox tickets for 2004

Catering Services for Dinner Party for 12 with Angela Brown and Lucia Flibotte

Cohasset Coastal Nisson Car Detailing (over $200 value)

Summer bracelet from EK Designs (value: $150)

Also includes all items listed for $50 and $25

For a $50.00 Pledge (You can win any of these items):

Wine Dinner for Two at BIA Restaurant (value: $150)

Adrienne Morris Salon Gift Certificate

"Margaritaville" Gift Basket (value over $75: Includes drink mix, glasses, liquor, etc.)

Necklace from YaYa Designs Jewelry (over $75 value)

Pilates Class with Kelly Gaumer (value: $100)

Also includes all items for $25 (and below)

For a $25 Pledge and below (You can win any of these items):

Brookstone BBQ tong set (value: $50)

Blockbuster Gift Cards (value: $20 and $10)

The Craft Factory Madeline Light

Cohasset Flip-flops (value $20)

Round of Golf for four at Par-tee Golf (value: $50)

Two $10 JJ's Ice Cream Gift Certificates

To make the tele-a-thon even more dynamic, the program will be hosting a talent show consisting of children from all of the Cohasset Public Schools, as well as some guest speakers and information about what the PSO has contributed.

To participate, phone in your pledges with your credit card to a professional calling center company, AnswerQuick. AnswerQuick has been handling WGBH annual phone drives as well as many school, radio and nonprofit companies for over 15 years. They will be answering the phone lines and securely processing your credit card pledges. Once your pledge has been accepted, your name will be entered into the raffles. The emcees will be drawing the winners' names at the end of the program (after 8:30 p.m.).

According to PSO fund-raising staffers, there are so many chances to win such wonderful prizes and support such a worthwhile program, it's a winning situation for everyone. For example, with a pledge of $100, your name will be entered in every raffle item drawing. Pledges of $75 will be entered in all items listed in the $75 pledge category as well as the $50 and $25 and below. The Cohasset PSO want to thank all of the wonderful local businesses that contributed such amazing items. It's truly inspiring to see how the local businesses support so many school fundraisers.

If individuals would rather send in a pledge instead of phoning in, please make your check payable to the Cohasset PSO and postmark your note with a check by Monday, May 10, to: Cohasset PSO, PO Box 30, Cohasset, 02025.

Please note: Any entries postmarked after May 10 will not be entered into the raffles.

The Cohasset PSO would like to thank everyone for their participation in making many goals become a reality for all of the children in our school system!

Osgood Elementary kids showboating for the upcoming Cohasset PSO tele-a-thon on May 12th. Just one of many items offered for the raffle are 2 sit-on-top Mainstream Kayaks.

Spring fling, art show

On Saturday, May 15, the Carriage House School, offering a Toddler Program and Preschool classes for children from ages 16 months to 5 years, will host it's biannual fundraiser, Spring Fling. This year, the school will have a fun-filled evening with drinks, hors d'oeuvres, entertainment and a silent and live auction.

Spring Fling will be held at the Carriage House School, 23 North Main St., in Cohasset from 7 to 11 p.m. The evening will kick off with a silent auction offering a vast array of items to bid on in support of the Carriage House. One of a kind items include handmade jewelry and specialty items for the home, as well as a pair of boxing gloves signed by Muhammad Ali.

The Live Auction will commence later in the evening and Anthony Everett, co-anchor of NewsCenter 5, will be the auctioneer for the evening. Live Auction items will feature fabulous packages including a weekend in Vermont, Boston Red Sox tickets and a stay at a Nantucket home, as well as beautiful children's art items made by the Carriage House School children.

Homemade hors d'oeuvres will be served as well as an assortment of desserts. Lively music from DJ Tom Bleakney, drummer of the Mitchell Brothers Band will keep things moving until 11 p.m.

Tickets to Spring Fling are $25 per person and may be purchased at the door with cash or check. Please call the school at 781-383-9785 if you have any questions.

Summer Institute offers courses at student center

Go on line at www.ccscr.org for complete course descriptions and to sign up:

• Gulf River and Cohasset Harbor Field Study and Research Project (for students entering grades 10, 11, or 12)

This project focuses on collecting water quality data in two of our watershed's important bodies of water — the Gulf River and Cohasset Harbor.

• Micro Bacteriological Field Study (for students entering grades 10, 11 or 12)

There are several water bodies in Cohasset that seem to be attributable to leaking septic systems. Bacteriological Field Studies represents an opportunity to investigate any number of these water bodies. New technology in monitoring enterococci bacteria will be available this summer at CSCR, thanks to a grant from the Lighthouse Keepers Corporation.

• The Clean Water Act Phase II Research Project: (for students entering grades 9- 12)

The landmark Clean Water Act, Federal legislation requiring cities and towns to develop plans to protect all water bodies, now requires that the town of Cohasset implement phase II of the Stormwater Management Plan. This plan requires monitoring the water that is discharged into streams, rivers, ponds and harbors when snow melts or rain falls.

• Aquaculture: an MIT funded research project begun by Kelly Hurley. (for students entering grades 9- 12)

This is a project funded by MIT's GEMS program (Grants for Excellence in Marine Science.) CHS student, Kelly Hurley, initiated this project, applied for funding, and has executed this project as an independent project during her senior year.

• National Park Field Study (for students entering grades 9 or 10)

National Park Field Study, a course offered for the fifth summer, is an intensive, 5-day study and exploration of a national park. This year's field study class will travel to a National Park renowned for its history, geology, bio-diversity, and beauty, yet the students will not leave their own back yards!

• Messing about the North River (Grades: 7-8)

Did you know that the North River is the only scenic protected river in the state of Massachusetts? Or, that the upper sections of the river include one of the largest tidal freshwater marshes in the state? Come along and we'll investigate and explore the North River watershed through a week of hands-on field trips while learning how to kay.

• Green Landscaping and Sustainable buildings: This workshop will use 40 Parker Ave, the venerable "Hagerty Building" as a case study for landscaping property in an organic, sustainable manner. The building will also be a focus of study for energy, efficiency, sustainability, and green management / conversion. Participants will work on one specific, hands-on project with the instructor as well as walk away with plenty of resource materials for immediate use in their own lives.

• Webmaster Workshop: This workshop will train students, grades 7-12, to maintain the website developed by the Center for Student Coastal Research. Students attending this workshop will be given the opportunity to work as the Center's webmasters, thereby building valuable skills and expertise to add to their resumes.

All course work must be completed by the end of September, 2004, if students desire course credit.

Please contact any CMHS science instructor for more details, or call the Center for Student Coastal Research at 781-383-0129.

Law Day celebrated at Hingham District Court

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Declaration of Independence says all men are created equal. But not all Americans have been treated equally over the years.

The 50th anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education — which set the stage for ending segregation in the nation's schools — provided the theme for the Law Day Ceremony at Hingham District Court on Monday.

The year's event, which included a host of local officials, also featured students from St. Paul School in Hingham and Holy Family and Rogers Middle School in Rockland, who participated in the essay and poster contests. Also on hand was Cohasset High School senior Sean Connolly, who is doing and independent study in law with First Justice Patrick J. Hurley. Accompanying Connolly was his advisor, teacher Jack Buckley.

State Trooper Dan Clark sang the Star Spangled Banner and Hingham High School's Katie Gassert provided moving renditions of "America the Beautiful" and "God Bless America."

The young essayists used Brown v. Board of Education as a springboard to show how the legislation led the way for the Americans with Disabilities Act , Women in Sports (Title IX) and Affirmative Action laws.

Chris O'Brien, 13, an eighth grader at Holy Family, who received honorable mention for his essay on the Americans with Disabilities Act, said his father, who is disabled, provided him with the motivation to tackle the topic.

"In this great country of ours," Chris wrote. "Lives really do get better for everyone when everyone in America has a chance to become the very best they can be.

"Only then will the words of our Founding Fathers ring as loud and true as they were meant to all along."

Attorney Joseph P. Lenahan, who successfully argued a landmark civil rights case which established employment rights for the disabled, before the United States Supreme Court in 1983, was the keynote speaker.

"Brown v. Board of Education started it all," Lenahan told his young audience. "But the fight for equality did not end with race relations. The fight extended to age, gender and the disabled."

He explained that law is the single greatest protection for the rights of the disadvantaged in society.

"Also, keep in mind that everyone in this room at sometime in their life will become disabled," Lenahan said. "As we age we all develop conditions that make us not qualified to do certain things."

Lenahan, who is nearsighted, took his glasses off to prove his point. He explained he couldn't see the audience without them.

He explained the case he argued before the Supreme Court was on behalf of a man who had lost part of his arm and wanted to go back to work as a railroad engineer. His client actually died as the case moved through the lower courts but various civil rights groups contacted him and were willing to help with the case.

Lenahan said lawyers are important because they can protect those who cannot protect themselves.

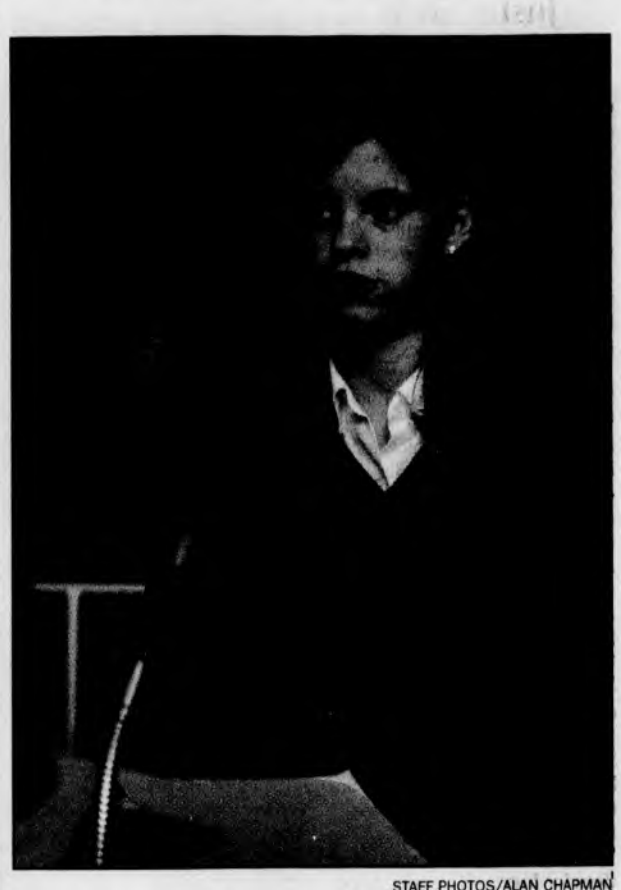
"Treating everyone equally is what our laws and our country stands for," he said.

In her essay, Jacqui Kenyon of St. Paul School, said disabled people are just as smart as anyone else.

"It is like a punishment to these Americans to turn them down without giving them a chance," she said. "I'm honored to live in a country so willing to address and correct this problem."

The event was organized and chaired by Attorney Mary Amrhein of the Plymouth County District Attorney's office and sponsored by the Plymouth County Bar Association.

Essay winners included: Tracy Jasper of Holy Family School (first place); Jacqui Kenyon of St. Paul School (second place); John White of Holy Family School (third place); and Christopher O'Brien of Holy Family School (honorable mention).



Poster winners included: Brian Sullivan of St. Paul School (first place); Parker Bowen of Holy Family School (second place); Rachelle La Poynte of Roger's Middle School (third place); Nevin Lally of St. Paul School (fourth place); and honorable mentions, Taylor Benson of Roger's Middle School, Nora Ross-Fitzgibbons of St. Paul School, Andrew White of Holy Family School, and Ellie Donahue of St. Paul School.

Nevin Lally of St. Paul School explains his poster, which won fourth place and focused on how the Americans With Disabilities Act has affected accessibility at his school.

Trooper Dan Clark sings the National Anthem at Hingham District Court at the start of Law Day on Monday.

OBITUARIES

Justin Scott Langham

Justin Scott Langham, 20 years old, of Cohasset, Massachusetts died Monday April 26, 2004, in Glasgow, Scotland, where he was attending the University. On foot, he was struck by a truck at 9:30 in the morning returning to his dormitory. He passed away immediately.

At the University of Glasgow, he was matriculating in a Scottish Master program in English Literature and Economics.

An Alumni of Cohasset High School and the Oxford Tutorial College in Oxford, England, Justin attained numerous achievements including AP Scholar of Distinction, a national Latin cum laude award grade, president of his junior and senior class, member and captain of his high school wrestling, lacrosse and football teams. In the UK, he played lacrosse for both Oxford University and the University of Glasgow. Earlier he was a member of the Cohasset and Coveleigh Club swim teams and the Cohasset Sailing Club. During high school, he enjoyed three years as a volunteer in the Appalachia Service Project.

The University conducted services for Justin in Glasgow. A special memorial service will be held in Cohasset at the Second Congregational Church in mid July.

In lieu of flowers, donations to Cohasset ASP (43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025) and a scholarship to be established by the Boosters Club (c/o Cohasset Middle High School, 143 Pond St., Cohasset, MA 02025) will be appreciated.

In addition to his many friends, Justin is survived by his parents, K. and Steve Langham of Pond Street, Cohasset; his grandmother, Frances Langham of Mamaroneck, New York; and his aunts uncles and cousins consisting of the Peter Langham family of Monticello, New York and the Eugene Jones, Charles Jones, John Jones, Jon Iber and Donald McKinney families of the Portsmouth, New Hampshire area.

Durno Chambers Jr.

Durno Chambers, Jr. 71, formerly of Cohasset, died April 10, 2004, at his daughter's home in Hanover, N.H.

Born in New York City, he was the son of Durno and Nina (Martin) Chambers. He graduated from Avon Old Farms School in Avon, Conn. and until his enlistment in 1952 in the United States Coast Guard, attended Columbia University in New York. He received the National Service Medal from the Coast Guard, and upon his discharge attended Babson College in Wellesley, from which he received a Masters in Business Administration in 1957.

During the course of his professional life, he held executive positions with Tucker Anthony and E.F. Hutton in Boston with Pain Webber in Stuart, Fla., and the First National Bank and Trust Company in Palm Beach, Fla. He retired in 1990.

Mr. Chambers moved to Cohasset in 1958 and lived there until 1979.

He leaves his second wife, Anne (Adams) Chambers, four daughters, Wendy White of Toronto, Canada, Hope Stragnell of Hanover, N.H. Eleanor Coughlin of Cohasset, and Gaylord Chambers of Leicester, N.C.; seven grandchildren and a brother, Austin Chambers, of Stonington, Conn.

He was predeceased by his first wife, Gaylord Hilliard Chambers Weston, and a sister, Hope (Chambers) Bulterman.

Mr. Chambers will be remembered for his devotion to his family, his generosity, his wit, his intelligence, love of history and his wonderful sense of humor.

A memorial service was held at St. Thomas Episcopal Church in Hanover, N.H. on April 23.

Donations in his memory may be made to Avon Old Farms School Alumni and Development Office, 500 Old Farms Road Avon, CT 06001.

Peter F. Tague III

Peter Francis Tague, III, of Cohasset, 64, died April 26, 2004, at his home after a valiant battle with cancer for the past year.

Born in Boston, he graduated from The Belmont Hill School in 1957 and Harvard College in 1961. After college he attended Naval Officer's Candidate School and served three years in the Navy.

For more than 30 years, he was prominent in the Real Estate Investment Trust business community.

He was a member of the Harvard Varsity Club, Owl Club, Cohasset Golf and Yacht Clubs where he was a past Commodore. An avid sportsman, he loved sailing, fishing, golf and skiing.

Mr. Tague leaves his wife, Sara (Cole) Tague; two daughters Sara Tague Fox of Cohasset and Emily Tague O'Marah of Dover; a twin sister Ellen Dwinell of Wayland; three grandchildren, Cecilia and Margot O'Marah, and James Peter Fox.

He was the brother of the late Agnes Woodburn.

A memorial Mass was held in St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was private.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in his name to Belmont Hill School, 350 Prospect St., Belmont 02478

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset handled the arrangements.

WORSHIP NOTES

Free wellness night for the community

The Caring Connection program at St. Paul's Parish in Hingham is hosting a free community lecture discussing therapeutic holistic care. The Caring Connection, a community outreach ministry program to the elderly and disabled invites Hingham residents and other residents from the South Shore Community to learn about complementary care. This is a terrific opportunity for ill or healthy people to educate themselves on healthcare and healing beyond the Western healthcare model. Learn about how acupuncture, chiropractic care, homeopathic care, massage therapy, Reiki and much more can aid you in a healthy and healing way. These therapeutic modalities will help people not only deal with a particular illness or chronic pain, but also help them integrate a holistic approach to their well being.

The "Wellness Ways" night will be held on Thursday, May 13, from 7 to 9 p.m. in the St. Paul's School Gymnasium on 20 Fearing Road. "I am so pleased to help coordinate this event for the community. More than seven years ago, I suffered from a life threatening illness and my journey back to health involved my own personal learnings of holistic care. It is exciting to bring these modalities together for the community so that they can learn about complementary care in one night," said Karen Lohnes, Harmony^2, The Mind/Body Connection.

Statistics show that over 75 percent of illnesses are caused by stress. There are resources for everyone out there to learn healthy ways to deal with stress, pain and illness. The conventional treatments in the complementary modalities usually focus on a "whole body" approach dealing with the symptoms and the mind and body connection with these illnesses. If you are looking to increase vitality, reduce pain and promote your well being come to "Wellness Ways" on Thursday, May 13, at St. Paul's Gymnasium for an education in holistic care that could change your life.

Feeding local hungry families

Food drive is Saturday

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Cohasset postal workers are joining a nationwide effort to help stamp out hunger.

Many families are planning vacations as the summer months approach. Others who rely on local food pantries, however, are wondering how they will feed their families.

Local food pantries which are usually well-stocked during the rest of the year find that donations drop off during the summer. When school ends, less fortunate children who are able to obtain a free or reduced-price meal at school during the day no longer have that option.

To help ensure there will be enough food to meet the need, the National Association of Letter Carriers (NALC) — in conjunction with the United States Postal Service, AFL-CIO, the United Way of Southeastern New England, America's Second Harvest, and Campbell's Soup — is sponsoring a food drive this Saturday, May 8, to restock local food pantries.

As part of that effort, Cohasset postal customers are invited to place canned and other non-perishable food items such as soup, juice, pasta, vegetables, cereal, and rice by their mailboxes that day for pick-up by letter carriers as they make their rounds. The NALC requests that no glass containers be left out. The food will be distributed to the Cohasset Food Pantry.

In past years, Cohasset postal customers have donated thousands of pounds of food.

In past years, Cohasset postal customers have donated thousands of pounds of food.

The drive is the largest one-day collection of food in the nation's history. NACL first participated in the effort about nine years ago. Over the years, millions of pounds of food have been collected, sorted, and delivered to local food pantries through the effort.

Abbey plant sale

The Glastonbury Abbey Plant sale will be held from 8:30 a.m. to noon on Saturday, May 8.

A large selection of plants will be available for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St. (Rt. 28) in Hingham.

Perennials, herbs, ground cover, ornamental grasses, bushes, fruits and vegetables will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local private gardens in the South Shore area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in Abbey gardens. Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who attend the sale. Proceeds go to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue beautification of the Abbey Grounds.

IT'S HAPPENING

Chamber music concert May 16

Members of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will present a Chamber Music Concert at the First Parish Meeting House on the Common in Cohasset on Sunday afternoon, May 16, at 4 p.m. The concert features a string trio - violin, viola and cello – performing three selections including Mozart; Bernhard Henrik Crusell's quartet Opus 2 in E-flat major for Clarinet, violin, viola and cello, and Crusell's solos for clarinet performed by Kai-Yun Lu.

Kai-Yun Lu, Clarinetist was born in Taipei, Taiwan, and received her Bachelor's and Master's degrees from the New England Conservatory of Music. She has performed with the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops and is Principal Clarinetist of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra.

Frederic Bednarz, the Canadian born violinist, serves as concertmaster of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Bednarz made his New York debut in 1999, has performed in festivals in the U.S. and Costa Rica and the Montreal Civic Orchestra. He is a member of the Yanvar Trio, ensemble in residence at the Longy School of Music in Boston. This prize-winning trio has performed recitals at Carnegie Hall and a chamber music tour throughout Vermont.

Willine Thoe, viola, was born in Hong Kong and trained at the Hong Kong Academy of Performing Arts. She has a Bachelor of Music Degree from Eastman School of Music and a Masters of Music Degree from the New England Conservatory of Music. She has participated in master classes with well-known violists and played in many music festivals in Germany. She has also performed with the Boston Modern Orchestra Project.

David Russell will perform on Cello. Mr. Russell, principal cello for the HSO, recently moved to Boston. He was assistant principal cello with the Tulsa Philharmonic in 2000 and on the teaching faculty of Oklahoma City University. He has toured in Europe and with many local ensembles and is a founding member of Furious Band, the 2000 contemporary Ensemble in Residence at the Aspen Summer Music Festival. He holds his D.M.A. degree from SUNY-Stony Brook, and other degrees from the Eastman School of Music, The University of Akron and Brandeis University. Mr. Russell has premiered numerous new works for solo cello by living composers in this country and overseas.

Tickets are $15 available at the door or by calling the First Parish office Monday through Thursday, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 781.383.1100.

Favorites on exhibit

Deer Hill School will host a Gala Art Opening on Tuesday, May 11 at 7 p.m. This Art Show titled, "Favorites 2004" represents the artwork of all Deer Hill students. Each student has chosen his/her favorite artwork of the year to be included in this exhibit. There will be refreshments and music. All are invited to attend. Admission is free.

In addition to this year's annual Art Show, Deer Hill will celebrate the grand unveiling of a permanent clay installation created by Deer Hill sixth grade students.

For additional information please contact Ann Berman, Deer Hill School art teacher at 781-383-6115.

Ladies' Night Out Wine Tasting set

A festive Ladies' Night Out Wine Tasting will be held from 7:30 to 10 p.m. on May 14, at Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum, 100 Sohier St., Cohasset.

Proceeds will benefit the regional museum. Primary construction has been completed, the playground is scheduled for a June installation and major exhibits are now in the planning stage.

The wines for this event will come from "down under," courtesy of New Zealand's Tim Fogarty from the House of Nobilo and Australia's Tony Charley representing Banrock Station. Amyra Chase of Cohasset Village Wine and Spirits will assist with the presentation.

Local restaurants and caterers will supply hors d'oeuvres and the museum's Scituate town committee has put together fabulous baskets for a raffle. Themes include spa, tennis, gourmet chowder and many more.

To reserve tickets at $45, send checks to Our World, P.O. Box 422, Cohasset MA 02025 or call 781-383-3198.

HSO Pops season finale May 8 & 9

On Mother's Day weekend, the Hingham Symphony Orchestra celebrates great music, mothers, and musicians, with their fun and festive, season-finale Pops concerts.

The concert on Saturday, May 8, at 7:30 p.m. will be held at F1 Boston, on Wood Road, Braintree. Located minutes off the highway, near South Shore Plaza, this facility's upbeat energy provides just the right tone for a Pops concert. F1's excellent kitchen will provide small plates of sweets and savory fare, as well as wine and Edison beer for purchase to benefit the HSO. Table seating adds to the festive ambiance.

In his Pops programming, Music Director Jin Kim follows the Viennese Pops tradition that was so successfully modeled by Boston Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler: sharing time-tested lighter classics by composers like Mozart, Strauss, Mendelssohn, and Dvorak. Plus, in keeping with an HSO tradition, one generous bidder from the audience will conduct the full orchestra in a rousing finale, Sousa's Stars and Stripes Forever.

The HSO is better than ever this season, according to music director Jin Kim. "The overall musicianship continues to reach new heights," says Kim. "We have attracted new, seasoned young professionals who are dedicated to their craft, plus we are developing more and more anchor musicians who become the musical core of the orchestra." As a testament to its level of musicianship, the HSO is proud to announce that its assistant concertmaster, Polina Sedukh, recently won a coveted position in the violin section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tickets at $30 for adults, $22 for seniors, and $10 for youth through age 18 are available in advance at La Petite Maison and Noble's in Hingham Square, Hingham and Weymouth Main Libraries, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, and Front Street Book Shop, Scituate, or call the box office at 781-740-5694 to reserve.

Cohasset hosts Rebif MS Walk

A five mile path starting and finishing at South Shore Community Center in Cohasset, is the rallying point for hundreds of South Shore residents as they take to the streets May 8, to fund the fight against multiple sclerosis. The Rebif MS Walk is a spring tradition, attracting more than 200,000 walkers at more than 700 sites nationwide, and raising more than $300,000 million. The Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society has organized the MS Walk since 1989. Each walker is encouraged to raise a minimum of $100, but most collect more than $200.

Individuals and corporate and family teams can register or volunteer to help online, www.msnewengland.org or by calling 1-800-493-Walk 9255), and in-person the day of the event.

MS is a chronic, autoimmune disease that affects the central nervous system, causing unpredictable symptoms including fatigue, paralysis, and blindness. Most commonly diagnosed between ages 20 and 50, MS affects women two to three times more often than men. In the US, more than 400,000 people have MS and 200 new cases are diagnosed each week. If you or someone you know has MS, contact the chapter, 1-800-493-9255, www.msnewengland.org a laughing matter

Women over a certain age have long commiserated about the memory loss, hot flashes and night sweats that accompany menopause. Now thanks to a clever musical revue that reworks hit songs from the 1950s, 60s, 70s and 80s, women can sing out in celebration of the change of life. "Menopause The Musical," with book and lyrics by Jeannie Linders, was first performed in March 2001 and has since brought its message of surviving the change through laughter to audiences worldwide. Already performed in England, Australia, Brazil, Mexico, Israel and South Africa, sit-down productions of the show are currently being presented in Atlantic City, Chicago, Miami, Orlando, New York, Los Angeles and now Boston, where an open-ended run began last month.

Four topflight performers topline the Boston production as seemingly disparate women — an aging soap opera star, a still-mired-in-the-past hippie, a high-powered executive and a middle-aged Midwesterner — who meet at a lingerie sale at Bloomingdales in Manhattan and soon realize they have some very personal things in common even though they are meeting for the first time. Before long, they're sharing their experiences with surgery, hormones, too much sex, not enough sex and more.

Garbed as an authentic flower child now in late bloom, Weymouth's Mary Callanan breathes humorous new life into the Peter, Paul and Mary classic, "Puff the Magic Dragon," reimagined here as "Puff my God, I'm draggin.'" Hingham native Adrienne Cote belies her South Shore roots and goes all out to convey the aw-shucks nature of her Iowa housewife character when she laments the size of her thighs to the tune of "My Guy." Her bio says she has done stand-in work for Susan Lucci, so it is no surprise that Kathy St. George is terrific as the ever-so-slightly past her prime daytime diva. St. George has one of the show's showiest numbers, visiting the audience for a "Heat Wave" that transforms into a tropical hot flash. Wydetta Carter rounds out the always game quartet. Carter's parody of "What's Love Got to Do With It" leaves no doubt that if she wants it, she could have a future as a Tina Turner impersonator.

With some good and some not so good parodies of 26 songs and some spirited, if uninspired choreography by Patty Bender, "Menopause The Musical" makes an often sensitive subject something women - and maybe even some of the men in their lives -can enjoy and even laugh about.

"Menopause The Musical" is being presented at the Stuart Street Playhouse, 200 Stuart Street, Boston. For tickets and information, visit the box office or call (800) 447-7400.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
SPEAK RIGHT UP!
If you know someone who has age-related hearing loss (presbycusis), there are some things you can do to facilitate conversation. To begin with, face the person who has the hearing loss so that he or she can see your face when you talk. Be sure that the person with a hearing impairment is able to observe facial expressions, gestures, and lip and body movements that provide communication clues. Turn off the TV, radio, and any other sources of competing sounds. Do not speak with a mouth full of food or while chewing gum. Finally, choose quiet environments for conversation. With the help of a hearing instrument and good communication skills, age-related hearing impairment can be successfully addressed.
And when you feel that things don't sound "right" or the way they used to but you don't know why, come to FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER for a complete, painless hearing evaluation from a board certified hearing instrument specialist. We will explain to you the mechanics of hearing loss and share with you the wonderful possibilities available for better hearing today. Let us demonstrate to you the superior results today's hearing instruments bring at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We also have an office in Abington. PH: 781-337-1144.
P.S. Do not shout when talking to a hearing-impaired individual, as shouting may only serve to distort speech.

Too much power for one person?

Town Manager under scrutiny

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Turn the clock back seven years. It was April 1997 and town meeting voted 75-61 for a profound change in town government by deciding on a town manager.

The town had been run by the board of selectmen, who were bogged down by minutiae, and a "weak" town administrator position, meaning the post had little authority or accountability.

Proponents, including the government structure committee charged with examining the town manager form of government for Cohasset, said the time was right for the town to have a chief administrative/financial officer to oversee day-to-day operations. The switch would free up selectmen to set policy, look at long-range planning and focus on bigger issues.

The government structure committee cited 40 percent cost overruns for the DPW garage, promises for a park at the Hagerty property that had not come to fruition after four years, and soaring legal bills to fight the expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill, as examples of poor management at Town Hall.

Selectmen's weekly meetings consistently dragged on for hours. Often critical issues came up at 11 p.m., when everyone was too tired to make any coherent points.

But at the time, opponents argued a town manager would not provide the checks and balances the town needs and worried that too much power would be vested in one person.

Now the issue may have come full circle.

With last week's abrupt departure of Mark Haddad, who resigned after holding the post for nearly seven years, the Cohasset Town Manager Act — approved by the Legislature — may be under scrutiny.

> "It was the perfect storm. We had a do-nothing board of selectmen and an overly aggressive town manager."
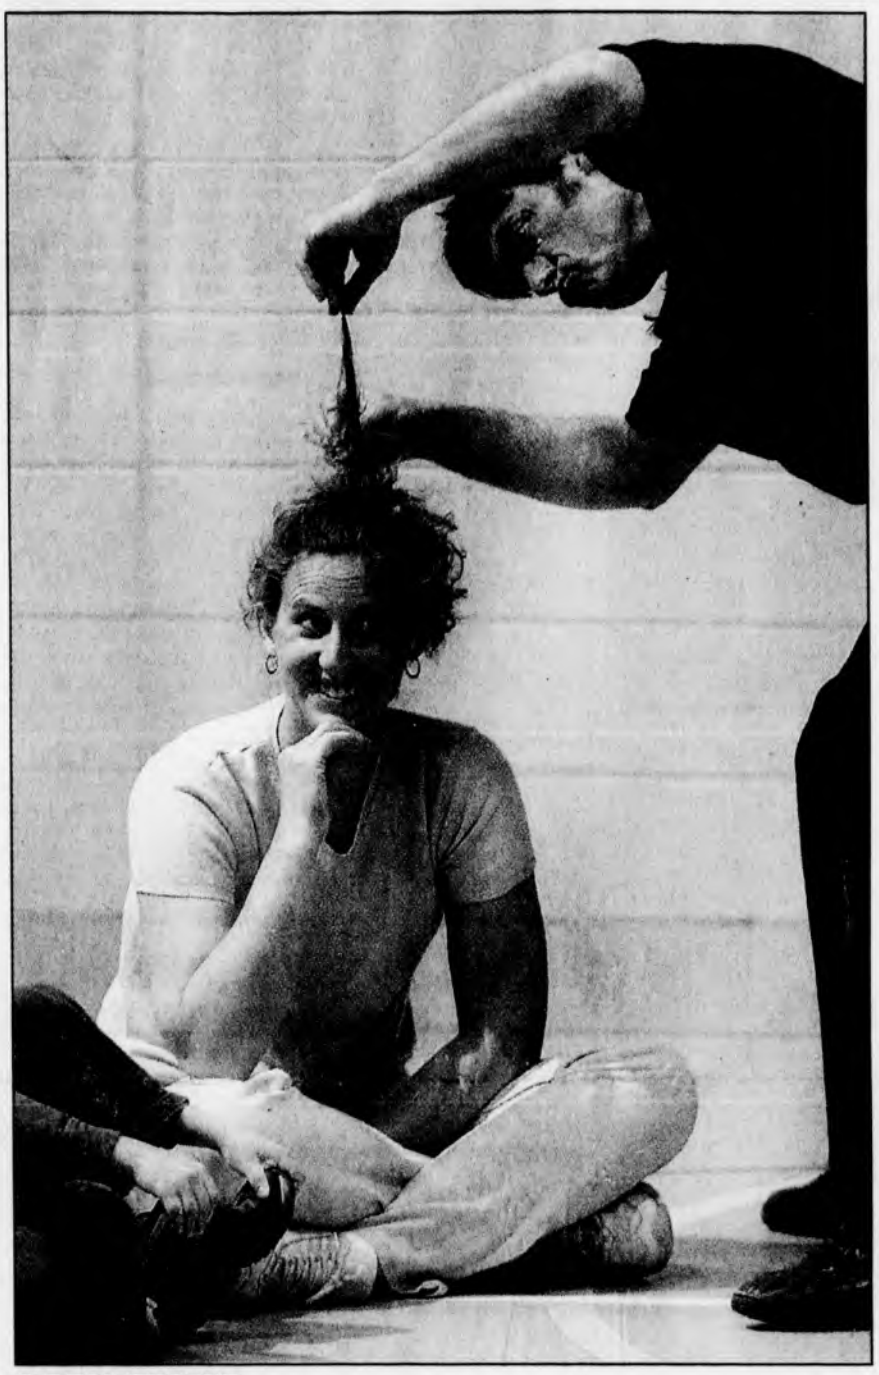
> — Peter Pratt



Peter Pratt, one of the principal authors of the Town Manager Act, said the act needs major reform even to the point of "re-framing" the position as a town administrator. He said Haddad had too much power and cited the town's ignoring the Hagerty Committee about the park project on Parker Avenue and disbanding of the personnel board as examples.

Haddad had the authority to fire employees who had no appeal board to go to, Pratt explained.

"There is nothing in the Town Manager Act that calls for the abolishment of the personnel committee," he said.

Pratt blames the selectmen's lack of oversight for allowing the town manager's role to become

Town Clerks ready

Gender-neutral marriage licenses start on Monday

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

"Party A" and "Party B" have replaced "bride" and "groom" but the procedure for issuing marriage licenses won't change drastically for town clerks throughout the Commonwealth, including Cohasset's Marion Douglas.

Starting of May 17, certificates of marriage may be issued to a person regardless of whether he or she intends to marry a person of the opposite or the same sex.

The Town Clerk's Office in Cohasset and its counterparts across the state will be able to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples for the first time on Monday.

Barnstable Town Clerk Lynda Hutchenrider, president of the Massachusetts Town Clerks Association, said other than being "gender-neutral" the marriage license application forms haven't changed that much.

"All these forms ask very simplistic questions, your name your address, how old you are," Hutchenrider said.

On the new forms, applicants are asked to identify if they are male or female. That classification has never been necessary, Hutchenrider said, because on the old forms applicants indicated whether they are the "bride" or the "groom" within the relationship.

Currently license applications ask couples to list the names of their mother and father, but as of

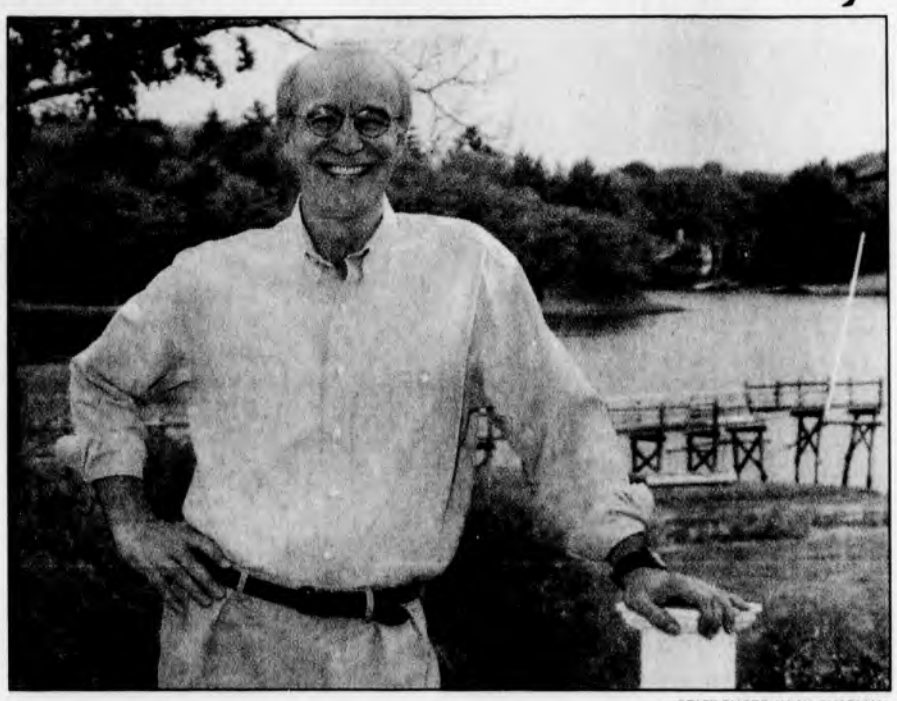
Three-time cancer survivor in Relay

Annual event is June 18 & 19



By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Harry St. Onge has never smoked, doesn't drink, runs every day, and eats well.

By all accounts, he is the picture of health. But St. Onge is a cancer survivor, and has had to battle the disease not once, not twice, but three times, and attributes his being able to beat the odds both to early detection and the support he received, not only from close friends and family, but the American Cancer Society.

In a time period of 18 months, St. Onge was diagnosed with three completely unrelated cancers — prostate cancer, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, and lung cancer. While many would be overwhelmed with only one form of cancer, St. Onge said through educating himself and keeping a positive attitude, it

Shops are slated for old ABB Optical site

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

There could be more change afoot for the downtown area, as a group of local business owners have banded together to purchase the former ABB Optical building, and will rename the site "James Brook Crossing."

The building, located across the street from the Pleasant Street Parfait, sits just behind the South Shore Art Center near the Greenbush line tracks. After papers are passed May 21, the prospective owners say they have plans to spruce the building up and create a little shopping complex which is in keeping with the theme of helping small business owners thrive in the Village.

Two of the businesses slated to move to Cohasset currently reside in the large yellow building located at 763 Country Way in North Scituate. The Windsor Tea Shop and Emporium Naturals, which sells handmade soap, both have plans to open their doors in Cohasset this summer.

> "We wanted to make it a destination point."
> — Judy McColgan, owner of the Windsor Tea Shop

"There's a lot going on in that little village," said Judy McColgan, owner of the Windsor Tea Shop. She said she has heard of the steps that are being taken to improve the downtown area, and she believes this purchase will add more improvements to the list. She, along with Julia Peterson, owner of Emporium Naturals, their two husbands, and another friend, will purchase the building together. The building was listed with Grand Gables Realty Group in Scituate for $785,000.

High school seeks prom chaperones

CMHS is looking for adults who are not the parent of any members of the senior class to chaperone the prom on May 28. Those interested should contact Cindy Alexander at (781) 383-0412.

New Supt. visits

Current Supt. Edward Malvey said Dr. Denise Walsh, who will take over as superintendent at the end of this school year, came to visit the schools again to get a better feel for what her new role will entail. He said during the course of the next few weeks, Walsh will be coordinating additional dates and times where she will be available to meet with members of the school staff as well as the community at large, and Malvey will make sure everyone is informed as the meetings get coordinated.

School start times to be discussed

Supt. Edward Malvey said he would like to see the issue of possibly changing start times and bus schedules for next year wrapped up before the end of this school year. He said during the next couple of School Committee meetings it will be discussed in order to come up with a solution before the last day of school, which is June 24.

School board receives kudos.

Teachers in Cohasset received recognition for all they do during National Teacher Day on May 4. However, working on their behalf to make the tough decisions which affect every classroom is the School Committee, and the Cohasset Teacher's Association wanted to express its gratitude for all the current and past members have done for them.

President of the CTA Marie Schleiff read the School Committee a letter expressing "our appreciation to you and the other members for your commitment to excellence. You've been unwavering in your commitment to maintaining as many teaching positions in the system as possible."

In addition, Schleiff said during state funding cuts, which led to a tough budget season, the committee continued to work toward keeping Cohasset the successful school system it is. Copies of the letter were given to current members, Chairman Rick Shea, Rick Flynn, Chartis Tebbetts, Jaime Williams, and Adrienne MacCarthy, and past members Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin.

"On May 4, the nation tipped its hats to 3 million public school teachers, and today we tip our hats to you," Schleiff said.

Full-day kindergarten option on the table

Parents of students in the Cohasset School System could soon be receiving a survey about implementing full-day kindergarten at the Osgood School. Members of a full day kindergarten task force have met four times this year to discuss the possibility, and it could be only a couple of years until the thought becomes a reality.

"There is an overwhelming positive research that suggests the benefit of full day kindergarten," said Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan, adding currently, the full day program is only a thought for Cohasset. However, School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said when the Osgood School was built, facilities to accommodate for full-day kindergarten classes were included in the plans, and "It's nice to see the plan coming to fruition."

Supt. Edward Malvey said the task force will continue to "do it's homework," on the issue.

St. Stephen's tree removal

The removal of nine trees growing on the slope of Bourne's Rock between the Parish Hall of St. Stephen's Church and the War Memorial facing the Town Common has been approved. Wallace St. John, who is on the property committee at St. Stephen's, said the nine trees have grown wild out of the ledge and were never cut back when they were smaller as they should have been. He said the trees are mostly Norway maples, but one is an ash tree. He said the wild trees are blocking the memorial trees in that area which have plaques, and he believes the memorial trees will grow better without the wild ones blocking their sun. St. John said Tree Warden Andy Swanson, who was at the shade tree hearing, recommended the trees be removed. A legal notice was posted in the paper for two weeks, advertising a shade tree hearing which was held April 28 and no one came to oppose their being taken down.

Updated list of objectives/goals

The list of goals and objectives for the Board of Selectmen, which was presented to the board last December, has been updated to reflect accomplishments made to date. Those items that have been completed include:

- Complete upgrade project at Beechwood Cemetery, including signage, reseeding, etc.
- Finalize Hagerty Property by making a decision on the building.
- Complete all memorials at Cohasset Cove.
- Complete meeting room on first floor.
- Complete Master Plan

Other goals the board will continue to work on include restoring SBAB funding, organizing the Greeenbush project, beginning the Village Revitalization Project, developing affordable housing for seniors, maintaining the high level of recycling at the RTF, and hosting roundtable discussions with all departments to discuss the future of the town.

Water Protection to be reactivated

The Water Commission is trying to reactivate the Water Resources Protection Committee and is looking for interested parties. They would like to see the committee made up of members from the Board of Selectmen, Water Commission, Board of Health, Conservation Commission, Planning Board, Open Space Committee, and three residents. Interested applicants should contact the Town Manager's office at (781) 383-4105.

MBTA ombudsman role questioned

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen are slated to meet with representatives of the MBTA as well as Cohasset-Greenbush Ombudsman Kristina Patterson, to help clear up the many questions that still surround the project.

Now that Selectman Chairman Michael Sullivan has been appointed as the new authority to mitigate with the MBTA, he and the rest of the board are seeking answers for many different aspects of the Greenbush project.

While discussing some topics they would like to take up at next Tuesday's meeting, the conversation turned to what the role of Cohasset-Greenbush Ombudsman Kristina Patterson really is. Patterson had been working with former Town Manager Mark Haddad as a liaison between the town and the MBTA, and the board questioned whether she has been doing her job effectively, as it seems she has not been providing all the information that it needs.

"We had discussed having Kristina come in every two weeks," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris, adding to date, that hasn't happened.

But in an interview Wednesday, Patterson said she has been writing monthly reports, which she said she gave to Haddad. She said there is a book of all topics relating to the Greenbush line at Town Hall, and copies of her reports should be there.

But Planning Board member Peter Pratt, who was at the meeting as an abutter to the proposed Greenbush line, said he feels the concerns of abutters to the project have been pushed aside as the project has moved ahead. He said in the beginning, abutters were asked to sign a "wish list" of concerns to be addressed such as noise and vibrations from the train to sealing windows, and he felt at that time, the town was showing great effort to incorporate public input. However, after speaking with Tom Carroll of Cashman-Balfour Beatty and Patterson, he found neither one had heard of those beginning efforts.

"I'm not sure she's been provided with all the information," said Pratt.

However, McMorris said the reason the ombudsman was hired in the first place was to specifically help with the concerns of abutters. She was to be a liaison between those in the community and the MBTA.

"If she's not being effective, maybe we need to find someone who is," said Selectman Rob Spofford.

But other questions surfaced as well.

There has been much talk about a proposed second train station behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and at this point, it is still unclear as to whether the station was an idea brought forth from the MBTA or a request from the town. McMorris said that is an issue that is going to have to be determined quickly.

"We really need to be clear. Is this something we're being brought?" she asked.

Patterson was scheduled to be at the meeting Tuesday, but had to cancel. Some members of the board would have liked it if she had been there to answer questions about a letter she wrote to the MBTA on behalf of the town regarding that second station.

The letter, dated April 28, 2004, was written to Jim Eng of the MBTA, and requested information on the town's behalf regarding the second station. She wrote, "The Town of Cohasset would like to explore the option of adding a Walk Up station in the Town Center area. I am writing to you on behalf of the town to request some information and assistance from the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority in coming to a conclusion on this topic." The letter goes on to ask questions that the town would need answered prior to making a decision.

However, McMorris said the board did not authorize that letter before it was sent, and she thought the issue of having a second station had already been decided. Even though the letter was written by Patterson, it should still come from the board, she said.

"I would like Kristina to come tell us why she wrote it. I'd like to know why she felt compelled to do this," said Selectman Rob Spofford.

But Sullivan said he believed Patterson had been directed by Haddad to find out what was going on with the project, because the town had no information on the second station.

"I'd like to hear it from Kristina why she wrote the letter," Spofford said.

Patterson says she had been directed by Haddad to write the letter after talks during a Rails with Trails meeting opened the discussion. Chairman of the Board of Health Steve Bobo was present at the meeting, and expressed concern over the fact that the planned train station will not be pedestrian accessible. Patterson said the thought of having a second pedestrian station was discussed, and did receive some support from people in town. In light of that, she said she received phone calls from Sullivan, Bobo, and Haddad, asking her to find out more information regarding possible affects another station would have on the town, including parking and the planned four-quad gates at Pleasant Street.

While she was directed by Haddad to write the letter, Patterson said some of what was in the letter was her idea, but added the questions she asked were questions the town needs to have answered before it can make a decision on whether a second station will be feasible or not. "It probably isn't too late. I don't think anyone at the T wants to, but at the very least we should look at it," she said, adding even if the line is constructed to leave the option for a second station open for the future, every choice should be explored.

There were questions as to whether a whistle-stop was ever floated before, and the selectmen wondered if the MBTA would even reconsider changing the plans at this late stage. But the board never came to a consensus as to whether it chose to endorse the concept of having an additional whistle-stop or not and there are many questions that remain unanswered. Patterson said she will be at the Selectmen's meeting next week, and will most likely meet with members of the board before then.

Police matter still unresolved

Cooling-off period ends

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The 45-day "cooling-off" period for two Cohasset police officers has come to an end. But the status of the officers still appears to be in limbo.

Selectmen went into executive session Tuesday night to discuss the police matter. Police Chief Robert Jackson, Town Counsel Peter Berry, and Attorney Leonard H. Kesten, who is retained by the town's insurance company MIIA, were also present.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said the selectmen should have a decision soon "on the direction they are going to take" in the matter.

"The whole issue is being discussed right now," Sullivan said, but said he could not be more specific.

Sullivan said he thought there were some attempts at structured mediation during the 45-day break but that the parties were far apart.

The joint statement issued by the town and the officers on March 17 stated the parties had "agreed to a cooling off period during which they would attempt to resolve their employment disputes through a structured mediation process." The parties also agreed not to make comments to the press during this time and were committed to using good faith efforts to seek alternative resolutions to their disputes.

Sgt. William Quigley and Officer James McLean were placed on paid administrative leave on Oct. 20 of last year amid allegations of conduct unbecoming a police officer and abuse of police power during some arrests. The town presented its case over three days of hearings this past winter before the cooling-off period was agreed to. The town has not rested its case and the officers did not have the chance to present their sides. Quigley and McLean have denied any wrongdoing and want to get back to work.

"It's gone on too long and we've been patient. But the town either has to put Quigley back to work or continue with the hearings."
— Attorney Kevin Powers

The department is currently down four uniformed officers including McLean and Quigley, and two officers who are on extended medical leave. The day shift detective was taken out of plain clothes and put back in uniform to cover shifts.

It is also unclear how the unexpected exit of Town Manager Mark Haddad, who served as the hearing officer, will impact the disciplinary hearings should they continue.

Douglas Louison of Merrick, Louison and Costello, who is representing the officers in the disciplinary hearings, said because Haddad was the fact finder and the appointing authority, arguably the hearings, if they resume, may have to start over.

Louison said he has not been contacted or advised by anyone on the status of the officers.

"It's increasingly frustrating for me and more importantly for the officers," he said. Louison said there was one day of mediation before the cooling-off period and nothing came of it.

There is still a pending lawsuit, launched by Quigley, naming Haddad and Chief Jackson personally and the town of Cohasset, for interfering with Quigley's employment as a police officer and invading his privacy. Depositions on that matter were due to start in March but were pushed back by 45 days pending the outcome of mediation talks.

Attorney Kevin Powers of Rodgers, Powers & Schwartz, who is representing Quigley in the civil suit, said the town has to come to a decision.

"It's gone on too long and we've been patient," Powers said. "But the town either has to put Quigley back to work or continue with the hearings."

Powers explained if he does not hear anything by the beginning of next week, he will proceed with the discovery phase of the civil suit that includes requesting the production of documents and conducting interrogatories, which is questioning the defendants under oath.

If the town returns Quigley to work, the defendants could still be liable for Quigley's attorney fees, lost overtime and damages for emotional distress, he said.

In March, the District Attorney's office notified the town it had looked into a series of Quigley's police stops and arrests that Chief Jackson provided and based upon the information furnished could not find any wrongdoing. But the DA said if the town had more information to send it along so the office could satisfactorily respond to Chief Jackson's request for an investigation.

The officers claim the town's disciplinary action was in retaliation for their actions relative to the police chief's family.

Quigley arrested Keith Jackson, the chief's son, the night of an alleged altercation at the Legion post and was on duty when Keith Jackson's former girlfriend and her father went to the station to file a complaint that Keith Jackson had hit her on several occasions.

McLean admonished then-Officer Brian Curran, the chief's son-in-law, for not following proper union procedures relative to an overtime grievance that resulted in the chief stripping McLean of his collateral duty as fleet manager. McLean then notified the national police union about unfair labor practices.

Town Counsel Peter Berry did not return a phone call Tuesday.

Revaluation notice to property owners

The Cohasset Board of Assessors will resume its ongoing revaluation effort as it prepares for recertification by the Department of Revenue for Fiscal Year 2005. During the next few months the assessors' staff will be physically inspecting residential properties in town. Due to the high volume of inspections, the staff will conduct daily door-to-door inspections as time permits.

The staff will perform an interior inspection, noting any changes on the property record card. The entire inspection will take just a few minutes. Measurement of buildings will be verified, if necessary. Digital cameras will be used to produce photos of the exterior of the building for the database.

The assessors' staff will be able to produce proper identification. If the homeowner or a person over 18 years of age is not at home on the first call, a notice will be left asking the homeowner to call for an appointment.

The scope of this update is to test the quality of the town's database and make any necessary corrections.

Mini-van to look like school bus

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Pick up a box of Crayola crayons, and there is likely to be one called "school bus yellow," but for the contingent of students who are picked up for school by a white van in the morning, that standard doesn't apply. However, that will all soon change as the Cohasset school district will be receiving a new yellow van this summer, all at the request of Transportation Coordinator Peggy Litchfield.

"I wanted a school bus yellow van," said Litchfield, adding because the special education van the schools currently have is white, many motorists don't equate it with being a school bus. "Sometimes I have trouble getting people to stop for the big bus," she said, and she expects a yellow van will serve as another means of ensuring the safety of students in Cohasset.

The new van will be outfitted with both amber and red lights, just like the big buses, to indicate to motorists when the driver will be stopping. With all the features it has, "It really is a mini bus," said Litchfield.

But in addition to the safety it will add, Litchfield said it will be a positive change for the students who ride on it. She said after talking to some of the students who are transported by van every day, they have all said they're "very excited they're going to have a yellow van, just like the buses," said Litchfield.

Litchfield has been driving buses in Cohasset for the past seven years, and serving as transportation coordinator for the past two. However, she began her driving career behind the wheel of a special needs van and realizes the importance the color will play in making the new van an integrated member of the transportation fleet.

The new van will be outfitted with both amber and red lights, just like the big buses, to indicate to motorists when the driver will be stopping.

Article 11 at the fall Special Town Meeting held last November, allocated $35,000 for one new special education van and $60,000 for a new school bus. The van was purchased from National Van Builders Inc., for $26,353 and has a guaranteed delivery date of June 20. Litchfield said she would like to keep the white van as well because "It's nice to have a back-up," especially when it comes to transporting students in wheelchairs.

The new bus was purchased from Stoneham Motor Company for $30,299 and is almost exactly the same as the other new flat-nosed bus which was delivered this year. Litchfield said the new bus that has already arrived is working out very well, although it did take some getting used to. But the kids who ride on it "love it," she said. "They think they're king of the hill."

The brand new bus should arrive in Cohasset by July 1.

School Committee member Rick Flynn said the bids for the vehicles were much less than anticipated and "We're actually turning back money," to the town. Of the $95,000 allocated, roughly $56,700 was spent, and Flynn said the remaining $38,000 will most likely be deposited into the town's general fund.

Your timing is perfect.

May 17, those relationships will be described on the forms as mother/parent and father/parent.

The new forms also ask applicants whether they've ever been in a civil union or a domestic partnership, an addition to the current question which asks whether applicants were previously married.

Hutchenrider said if the applicants are from out of state, they will be required to explain where they intend to live.

She said these changes will not be difficult for town clerks to handle.

But what has been difficult is fielding questions on the issue from the inquisitive public, when the clerks themselves did not have the answers, Hutchenrider explained.

Since the Supreme Judicial Court ruling last fall, Hutchenrider said town clerks have been left in the dark on the issue.

"The thing that's been difficult for us is not having any information at all," she said. "It's been a knock down drag out fight to get information."

But that has changed over the past two weeks as town clerks attended training workshops.

Douglas and assistant town clerk Carol St. Pierre attended a two-hour workshop Friday in Canton with a representative from the governor's office and the director of vital records in the state.

"The main thing that is different is that we have to ask everyone for proof of residency," Douglas explained.

Under state law, marriage licenses cannot be issued if that marriage would be not be recognized in another state. Massachusetts is the only state in the country where same-sex marriage is permitted by law.

On Nov. 18, 2003, the state Supreme Judicial Court in a 4-3 vote ruled there is no prohibition to same sex marriage in the state constitution but stayed the entry of judgment for 180 days to give the state Legislature time "to take such action as it may deem necessary in light of this opinion."

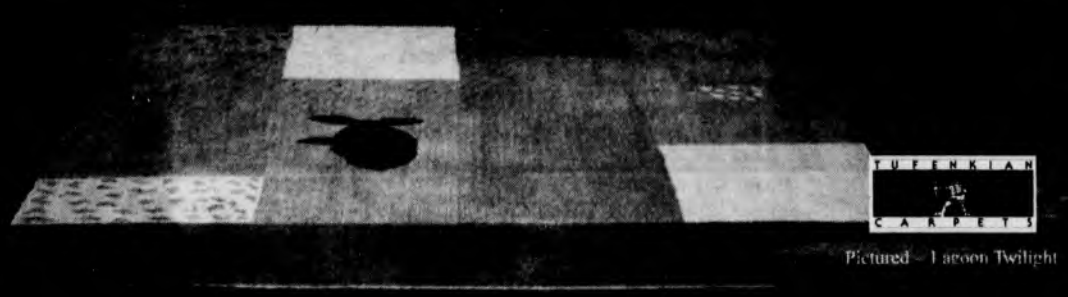
The Legislature passed a proposed constitutional amendment that would declare marriage as the union between one man and one woman, and would give two persons of the same sex the right to form a civil union. The next legislative session would have to vote on and pass a bill for the proposed amendment to be presented to the voters in the November 2006 election.

"The main thing that is different is that we have to ask everyone for proof of residency."
— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

Douglas said so far one same-sex couple has inquired about applying for a marriage license in Cohasset.

Hutchenrider said despite the controversy that has hovered around the issue of gay marriage, Massachusetts town clerks must put whatever personal beliefs they have on the issue aside, and simply do their job.

Marriage intentions



- Starting May 17, marriage certificates may be issued to same-sex couples.
- Bride and groom designations are replaced by Party A and Party B.
- All individuals must be at least 18 years old to marry.
- There is no residency requirement to get married in Massachusetts.
- But couples from out of state cannot get married here if their marriage would not be legal in their state.
- Massachusetts is the only state where marriage between two people of the same sex is permitted by law.
- If Scott lives outside Massachusetts and intends to continue to reside outside Massachusetts, the town cler.k cannot issue Scott a license if he intends to marry a person of the same sex unless same-sex marriage is permitted in that state.
- If Becky lives in Massachusetts and would like to marry Sue, who lives outside Massachusetts, the town clerk can issue a marriage certificate as long as Sue intends to reside in Massachusetts.

Selectmen are faced with more questions than answers

Try to regroup without Haddad

In their first meeting Tuesday since Haddad left, selectmen appeared to have trouble coming to a consensus on more than one issue.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In the wake of Town Manager Mark Haddad's abrupt departure last week, a sea of responsibility will need to be divvied up, and at this stage, it seems there are many loose ends and unanswered questions to be addressed as the town moves forward.

In their first meeting Tuesday since he left, selectmen appeared to have trouble coming to a consensus on more than one issue. While the selectmen voted last week in favor of installing one utility pole on South Main Street — which would be on the opposite side of the street from all the other poles and would send wires over the street to the house — it was brought up again for discussion. Some residents had expressed suggestions to selectmen regarding other ways the wires could be run, making the pole on the other side of the street unnecessary and eliminate wires over the street. However, Selectman Rob Spofford was against bringing the issue up again and asked, "Are we going to start rethinking votes?"

Spofford said not only can the board not take back a vote just because it wants to, but because that resident was told to go ahead he has probably already begun work and it would be unfair for him to have to stop because the board has changed its mind on something it already made a decision on.

There were many concerns that surfaced regarding the train. Questions regarding a possible whistle-stop station, including whose idea it was to reconsider the plans that were in place for Cohasset, as well as the train's effect on flooding and the James Brook culvert will be discussed at upcoming meetings.

The Waterfield Design Group, which is designing the downtown streetscape for the Village Revitalization project, has taken on design work for the culvert. Selectmen said plans currently show a design for a 50-year storm, rather than 100-year storm, which the Federal Emergency Management Agency requires. Spofford said he would like to know why the town has design plans for a 50-year rather than a 100, and added to change it will cost the town money.

"Who told them to design at 50 years? If they just wanted to do 50 years because it's cheaper, I have a problem with that," Spofford said.

There were also questions regarding the downtown village project as talk surfaced regarding whether the Waterfield Design Group has really been following the orders from the board. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said there has been a loss of roughly five parking spaces, which is not going to work for the merchants downtown, and was not directed by the board.

"That represents a change from what Waterfield said they designed," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris, adding the board has been assured from the beginning there will be no loss of spaces. While McMorris said she has not seen the most recent set of plans, Dormitzer said they do reflect a loss of parking.

"I still don't know where the clock came from," said Selectman Fred Koed, which was another element that was not originally in the plans.

Planning Board member Peter Pratt said he has been watching the selectmen's meetings throughout the revitalization talks, and wishes he had a nickel for every time former Selectman Merle Brown had to ask for the bumpouts to be taken out. "There's been someone else directing (Waterfield), and what you guys want and what the town wants aren't making it to the plans."

As of now, the board has not come to any consensus as to whether it would support a whistle-stop station or not, but it will be working toward ironing out some of its differences and gaining more information on various issues including the James Brook Culvert and the plans for the Downtown Revitalization the next few weeks. The board is scheduled to meet again Tuesday, May 18, at 7:30 p.m.

Too much power for one person?

all-encompassing.

"It was the perfect storm," Pratt said. "We had a do-nothing board of selectmen and an overly aggressive town manager."

But Tom Gruber, who led the citizen's petition drive that brought the issue before the annual Town Meeting in the spring of 1997, says the Town Manager Act has worked very well.

"The selectmen act more like the board of directors and the town manager has all the responsibility for running the day-to-day activities with the exception of the schools," he said.

"So much more has gotten done in the past seven years here than before," said Gruber, noting the town is in a much stronger financial position than in 1997. He also said a town manager adds consistency in town management where boards can change at every election.

When the town manager form of government came before Town Meeting, a majority of the selectmen were against the change. Selectman Ronnie McMorris argued at the time for a "strong" town administrator and worried that a town manager would have too much operational control over the town.

Pratt, who was the sole selectman to endorse moving to a town manager, now says selectmen have allowed too much power to be centralized in the hands of the town manager. One change he suggests is having the director of finance report to the selectmen and not the town manager.

"We need to build into the act more checks and balances to protect the public's interest," he said. "There has to be 100 percent visibility over the expenditure of town funds. Substantial reform is needed to bring the public back into town government."

"There has to be an effective middle ground between being fully decentralized and highly centralized," Pratt said.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said it makes sense to look at the Town Manager Act to see if it should be altered to some degree. "It certainly makes sense to discuss concerns," he said.

But overall he said the Town Manager has been a successful form of government.

"With all we went through over the past seven years, under the old form of government, we would not have come to the same conclusion," he said. "Having a point person has been very effective.

"The issue now is how much control and what built-in audit systems are needed to protect the interests of the town." He stressed selectmen have not had any reason for concern but looking at the Town Manager position from an organizational standpoint makes sense now that there is a vacancy.

Newly elected Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who likened the town manager to an "unelected mayor," says selectmen need to be more involved in the budget process. The way it is now, he said, the town manager is both the CEO and the CFO and once the budget is approved can move money around in different categories without oversight.

"Because selectmen have not been part of building the budget, they are not sure what happens," he said.

Dormitzer said Cohasset needs to look at the experience other towns have had with town managers and town administrators to see how those jobs are constructed and to have the government structure committee take another look at the town manager position.

In recent developments, Pratt cited the $300,000 spent on design for revitalizing the village, still with no final design; and the fact the Cook estate package was awarded to a developer without the question of handling the septic system being answered; and lack of communication between the MBTA and James Brook flood control projects regarding wetlands, as recent examples of management problems at town hall.

"Any one of these could be a colossal failure," Pratt said. "But the town is working with volunteers to straighten this out."

Severance pay for Haddad undisclosed

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said Tuesday the board does not yet have an answer on how much money former town manager Mark Haddad will receive subsequent to his resignation.

"Nothing is totally finalized at this point," Sullivan said, adding he hopes to have the matter "finalized within the next couple of days."

Haddad abruptly resigned Wednesday, May 5. Selectmen continue to be tight-lipped about Haddad's exit only saying it was for personal reasons. Selectmen formally voted Tuesday night to appoint Director of Finance Michael Buckley to serve as Town Manager in the interim.

Water main flushing continues next week

The Water Department is flushing water mains through May 31. Flushing will take place on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m. The anticipated flushing schedule for the week of May 17 follows:

May 17– Jerusalem Road from Forest Street to Atlantic Avenue and all streets off this section of Jerusalem Road.

May 18 – Pond St. from Route 3A to the High School; Clay Spring Rd.; Reservoir Rd.; Old Pasture Rd.; Tupelo Rd.; Bayberry Lane; Arrowwood Rd.; Evergreen La.; Pleasant St.; Sohier St. from Deer Hill School to Ripley Rd.; Smith Pl.; and Cushing Rd. from Smith Pl. to Norfolk Rd.

May 19 – Pond St. from the High School to Spring St.; Woodland Rd.; Holly La.; Bancroft Rd.; Norfolk Rd.; Hill St.; Ash St.; Oak St.; Norfolk Ln..; Cushing Rd. from Norfolk Rd. to Spring St.; Virginia La.; Lantern La.; and Spring St.

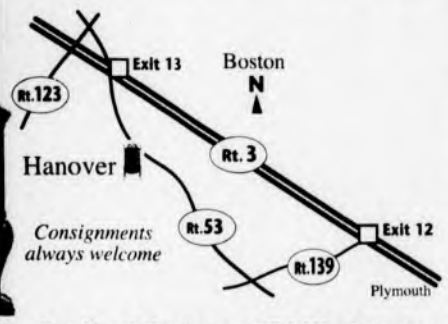
Residents will be provided advance notification in the Patriot Ledger and Cohasset Mariner of the schedule for flushing each segment of the system. In addition, temporary street signs will be placed strategically around the affected area on the day of flushing.

Residents should monitor the Water Dept.'s web site, www.cohassetwater.org and the local cable access, Channel 10 for schedule changes.

"Flushing cleans out sediment and deposits which may have accumulated in the water mains and is an important part of the continuing efforts to improve drinking water quality to our customers," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission.

Do not wash clothes during the time the flushing occurs. If clothing becomes stained it can be cleaned by using "Iron Out" which is available for free from the Water Department.

During the flushing program, some temporary discoloration of the water may occur. Run the COLD water faucet, preferably outside, for a short time until the discoloration clears. If your water is discolored, avoid using hot water until you flush your hot water tank by opening the valve at the bottom of the tank.



Please call the Water Department at (781) 383-0057 with any questions.

Three-time cancer survivor in Relay For Life helped carry him through, and now he is cancer free.

"You have two choices when you're diagnosed with cancer. You can either sit and think about it, or make it a positive experience," he said. He chose the latter.

For the past three years, St. Onge has served as one of three captains for the Glastonbury Abbey's Relay For Life team and is helping raise money for the American Cancer Society while spreading the word about his recovery. The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life is an overnight benefit event in which team members take turns either running or walking laps, trying to keep one team member on the course at all times.

But there was a time when St. Onge would not have been able to participate in the Relay.

St. Onge was diagnosed with his first bout of cancer in 2000. Knowing he has a history of cancer in his family, he said he has always been very careful about getting an annual physical. When tests during a routine checkup on his prostate came back slightly elevated, his doctor suggested a biopsy be done, and that December, his prostate was removed.

The following May, at his next annual physical, the doctor found a lump on St. Onge's neck, and he was then diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, a cancer of the lymphatic system, and he was scheduled for surgery once more.

However, St. Onge said that throughout those first two cancers, no amount of surgery or chemotherapy could slow him down that much. An avid runner, he had been running eight miles a day even during his illness. However, just when he thought he was cancer-free, he began to notice he couldn't finish his run without stopping, even if just for 30 seconds to catch his breath, and began to wonder if that might be something he should get checked out by his doctor.

"You have two choices when you're diagnosed with cancer. You can either sit and think about it, or make it a positive experience."
— Harry St. Onge

In the fall of 2001, St. Onge returned to the doctor who found there was a small gray area on one of his lungs. "The doctor had no clue what it was," St. Onge recalled. A bronchioscopy was scheduled, and it came back negative, and a lung biopsy showed nothing either. But when a small piece of scar tissue from his lung was removed, testing showed it was malignant, and St. Onge underwent another surgery to remove two lobes in his right lung.

While it did take some time for St. Onge to get his lung capacity back, he started off taking short walks down to the end of the street, and has worked his way back to running eight miles again. "I ran this morning," he said.

He said by having a healthy lifestyle, he believes he has been able to recover more quickly. "I got all that out of the way, and now I'm fine," he said with a smile.

Because he has such an unusual success story, St. Onge said by sharing his tale, other people will be able to see how well he's done and feel a renewed sense of hope for their condition as well. "In most cases, cancer is not a death sentence," he said. "There's a lot of hope out there for people who've been diagnosed."

By participating in the Relay as a survivor, St. Onge said it has really opened his eyes to the amount of people who have gone through similar experiences. "Until you start talking about it, you don't know how many other people have the same situation," he said. "It's been a very rewarding and uplifting experience," he said.

In addition to the Relay, which will take place June 18 and 19 at Cohasset Middle-High School, there are events in town that will help raise funds for the American Cancer Society. St. Onge said this year the Spain Brothers will be playing a concert of Irish music at the Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center on June 5. Like so many who hear about helping the American Cancer Society, St. Onge said when he asked the band if they would like to perform, they said yes without hesitation.

With his continuing good health, St. Onge says he has been enjoying spending time with his family, including wife Kathy, son Mark, daughter Heather, and her new baby Connor who was born the day before the Super Bowl. St. Onge runs every day and is taking good care of himself, and keeping up with his regular physicals.

"You can't be complacent," he said, adding every time he gets a headache or a pain that's a little different, he thinks twice about whether he should have it checked out by his doctor. While he says it's important to live for today and leave the past in the past, it is very important for him to be conscious about his health moving forward.

"All three cancers were detected very early, and in that case I've been very fortunate," he said.

For more information on the Relay for Life on June 18 & 19 at Alumni Field, please visit the American Cancer Society's web site at www.cancer.org, or contact Justine Vanderlugt at (781) 383-2956.

Several shops are slated for the old ABB Optical site

"We wanted to make it a destination point," said McColgan, adding she would love to see customers come in her shop for tea and a light lunch, then stay and shop in the others. Her current tea shop does not have the space for a sit-down tea room where she could offer finger sandwiches or tea cakes, and the move is something she has been looking forward to.

McColgan said her shop will be located at the front of the building, which resembles a Cape-style house. Peterson will also have her soap shop in the building. Peterson's husband, who owns the Platinum Spike, currently located in the Village next to French Memories, will also be moving to the building on Pleasant Street. Other possible businesses include a flower shop and a health food shop.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who has been very involved with the Village Revitalization efforts, said as far back as he can remember, that site has never been used for retail businesses, but having more local business owners in the downtown area would be a wonderful thing to see.

"I will always support and encourage more businesses downtown," he said. However, at the root of any successful business venture is the traffic necessary to support them, and he said that area of the Village is "a little out of the way." However, he said having several small businesses in a cluster might be just the kind of setting to help get more interest going in that part of town. "I'd love it to do well," he said.

While Peterson plans on moving into the building just after passing papers, renovations will need to be completed in parts of the building to bring it up to code. The first floor will also need to be divided with a central corridor, to allow the various businesses to operate separately within. McColgan said she plans to begin working out of her store by July 1.

Group to save teachers provides progress report

School board tackles concerns

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With $35,000 raised so far, members of the Committee to Save Three Teachers are optimistic they will be able to raise enough funding by the end of this school year to retain three elementary teaching positions which would otherwise be cut.

The committee has set its overall goal at $105,000, which would pay the salaries for three entry-level teaching positions for one year. Because three teachers will be retiring at the end of this school year, the school committee decided it would not include hiring replacements in the budget as a cost-saving measure.

"Although we did not want to cut teachers, we felt it was necessary," said School Committee member Rick Flynn. Even with a Prop. 2-1/2 override — passed at the ballot box this April — the $400,000 gained wasn't enough to offset a dramatic decrease in state aid. Prop. 2-1/2 is the state law that caps the amount a municipality can raise its tax levy from year to year.

In an effort to answer questions and help allay some of the concerns that have been expressed around town, members of the Committee to Save Three Teachers, headed up by Barbara Buckley, came before the School Committee again last week. However, because the campaign was discussed at length at the School Committee's last meeting, and was not listed on the agenda, Flynn said the conversation would have to be somewhat limited. However, he acknowledged the fact that many residents around town have questions about the fund-raising and some concerns have been expressed, and it is important to clear up any misunderstandings if possible.

Buckley's committee says losing three teachers will have a dramatic impact on the education of elementary level students in Cohasset. With three teachers gone, students in three different grade levels will be moved from six classes down to five, which will mean more children in the affected classrooms.

"We have an opportunity to fix a problem in our schools, even if it's only temporary."
— Barbara Buckley, Committee to Save Three Teachers

"There are two things that are not debatable in education. The value of reading to children in their preschool years and the value of small class sizes," said Barbara Buckley who has spearheaded the fund-raising efforts. She added while she realizes there may be other answers to the problem, currently hers is the only group actively seeking out a solution.

"We have an opportunity to fix a problem in our schools, even if it's only temporary," she said.

Osgood Elementary School Principal Janet Sheehan said the loss of three teachers will impact class size. The projected enrollment for next year's second grade class is 117 students. While students are currently divided into six classrooms, the loss of a teacher in that grade would mean a reduction to five classrooms with 23.4 students per class, up from the current 20 per class. Sheehan said in grade three, it is projected there will be 121 students enrolled next year, and with five classes there would be 24.2 students per class. Grade four has 127 projected students for next year, and with five classrooms there will be 25.4 students per class.

Buckley acknowledges there have been concerns floating around town. School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said one of the main concerns that has been voiced to her, which is a concern she shares, is the impact raising private funds will have on future overrides. If private funds are raised now, she said there is a good chance overrides will not pass in the future if people think private donations are an option to cover the cost. "Sometimes our best efforts can backfire," said MacCarthy.

In addition, MacCarthy said when funds are raised it is usually better if they can be used toward something tangible. The $105,000 is only a "Band-Aid" and will not solve the problem after next year. She said while it would be great to see the three teaching positions retained, if any have to go, the elementary levels might not be the worst scenario as many teachers have aides with them in the classroom.

Flynn said there has also been some discussion around the funds themselves and how they might be spent.

"The money being raised has been earmarked for teaching positions. The fund-raisers have no ability to tell us who those teachers will be. Janet Sheehan and Keith Gauley will make the decision as to which grade levels need the teachers the most," said Flynn.

In addition, Flynn said he has heard some in town don't think the school committee should not accept the funding Buckley's committee raises. However, he said the funding will be accepted without any expectations from the group that has raised it, and it has been made clear from the beginning there has been no commitment from the school committee to fund the positions moving forward.

For more information on the Committee to Save Three Teachers,, please call Barbara Buckley (before 9 p.m.) at (781) 383-8261. Donations will be accepted until the end of this school year, and checks should be made out to the Cohasset Educational Foundation. Checks can be sent to Buckley's home address at 272 North Main St.

Village plans not in concrete

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen are still split on whether the town needs to appoint a new downtown revitalization review committee to help take a second look at the plans drawn by the Waterfield Design Group, and offer expertise for how to potentially make the project better.

The board voted 3-2 last week in favor of the idea, however, discussion still continued this week regarding whether it makes sense to have a committee charged with taking a second look at plans that have already been finalized.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who did not vote in favor of appointing the committee, said at this point, she thinks the community would be best served by having the members of the task force as well as the Waterfield Design Group and the Board of Selectmen come together to meet at a public hearing, but does not see the need of having the group make suggestions on its own. "A public hearing would let everyone come together and hash this out with everyone present," she said.

However, Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who has been heading up the effort to assemble the task force, said there are still some major issues that need to be resolved, and this group could be the cost-effective way to make that happen. He said for a project that is going to last the town for the next 50 years, it's important it gets done right. The task force would be able to put additional information on the table, for a plan that "truthfully needs to be reconsidered."

Dormitzer said the loss of parking spaces the current plans show, as well as the decision to add decorative lighting fixtures between utility poles, must be addressed.

Dormitzer said the loss of parking spaces the current plans show, as well as the decision to add decorative lighting fixtures between utility poles, must be addressed. In addition, using poured concrete when more than 400 residents have said they are interested in having anything but concrete, goes against what the town wants.

Dormitzer also said the plans do not include any improvements to the area by Cohasset News and the Village Butcher Shop & Deli, which to some is seen as the area of the village in need of the most help. However, McMorris said Waterfield was never directed to look at that area.

Selectman Rob Spofford said Dormitzer had just done a great job of summarizing the task force's concerns, and he agrees with McMorris that appointing the group is probably unnecessary and maybe it shouldn't be done.

"We also have a precedent that the minority rules in this town, and last week I lost," he said sarcastically, and if the board already voted to go against a Town Meeting vote by bringing up the discussion to change the plans, even when the town has already spoken, why not go back on this vote too?

Phil Smith, 26 Elm St., said he thinks the plans drawn by Waterfield have "been railroaded through this place." He said if the plans aren't reflecting what the town wants, the design group isn't doing its job.

"I deal with clients every day. Our town is the client, and they have to listen to the town," Smith said.

McMorris said there have been concerns the plans have been changed and do not reflect what the board was under the assumption it was receiving, and that will need to be discussed with Waterfield.

"As much should be finalized before they come because they're going to charge us more money," said Roger Hill, 19 Highland Ave., adding he has seen Waterfield called in when there's confusion, only to leave the town in confusion, charging money for every visit.

"I would have fired them two years ago. They have done a number on this town," said James Watson, owner of Cohasset Hardware.

The board appointed the committee, which includes Bob Sturdy, Jim Sandell, Phil Smith, George McGoldrick, Neil Murphy, Tom Hamilton, Amyra O'Connell, David Chase, Wayne Sawchuk, and Dormizer. While Spofford had planned on being a part of the committee, he will be out of town on business, and because the group will want to move quickly, McMorris will take his place.

All-facilities stickers to go on sale June 7

The expiration date of the beach and Recycling Transfer Facility permits is June 30. The "all facility sticker" for the next fiscal year will be on sale starting the week of June 7 during normal business hours at the town hall and at the DPW garage on weekends starting June 12 from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and Monday-Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. An "all facilities sticker" will be $30, the second vehicle $30 and seniors is $15.

This sticker will allow access to the Recycling Transfer Facility, Sandy Beach as well as, include parking at all areas in town that require a sticker. In addition, residents will be required to purchase special bags in which to dispose of all trash that cannot be recycled. These bags will be offered at the Dept. of Public Works building and various locations throughout the town. You are encouraged to purchase your sticker by mail by providing the appropriate fee, a copy of your current registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

ARTS NIGHT AT OSGOOD

On Wednesday evening, May 19, the Osgood School Parent School Organization (PSO) will host an Arts Night for students, parents and friends. Using the school's successful Math and Science Night as a model, Arts Night will feature exploratory stations focusing on various art forms including dance, music, pottery, illustration, painting, and more. The highlights of Arts Night include Scituate artist Mat Brown, chief creator and illustrator of Building 19's popular cartoon ads. He will offer short hands-on demonstrations in illustration and offer his belief that illustration is something anyone can do –with practice and desire!

The Osgood School gymnasium will showcase the Boston Ballet School, presenting performances throughout the evening. Osgood School Art teacher Betsy Ogden will demonstrate on the pottery wheel and with student participation hopes to create a unique and inspired sculpture. Gym teacher Kevin Dykas will celebrate rhythm and movement with line dancing. And, Deer Hill instrumentalists will showcase some of the many instruments in a marching band. Arts Night is supported in part by a grant from the Cohasset Cultural Council, as administered by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, a state agency.

Arts Night will begin at 5:30 p.m. and run until 8:30 p.m. on Wednesday, May 19th. It is open to the Osgood School family. Admission is free.

CANCER BENEFIT

The couples recently joined 300 guests bedecked in fancy hats as they celebrated this year's Kentucky Derby in style at the American Cancer Society's Gala 2004 at the Castle at Park Plaza in Boston on May 1. In the past five years, this gala event has raised $2.7 million in vital funds to benefit the Society's programs of research, education, advocacy, and patient services.

A NIGHT TO REMEMBER

For all those who are looking for a great night out and who want to remember "the Chief" come to the Sons of Italy Hall on Route 3A in Hingham this Saturday night. The Fourth Annual Robert A. Goyette Scholarship Fund is underway and Bob's family is holding this an evening of dinner and entertainment to benefit this fund. The scholarship is awarded each year to a deserving girl and a deserving boy from the graduating class of CHS. For a $15 admission at the door, you will be able to feast on an all-you-can-eat buffet of spaghetti and meatballs (Bob's favorite meal), enjoy some entertainment with Butch Sterns, the Fox 25 sports anchor returning as emcee, and take part in raffles and an auction for some amazing prizes.

Last year was a very busy one to say the least in the family with Tom and Jane welcoming Jillian in April; Tim and Nancy welcoming Brooke in July; and Pete and Jacqui welcoming "little Peter" in August. Now that things are a bit settled down, they are ready to have a fantastic evening and would love to have everyone come and continue this tradition with them. For anyone who is unable to attend, donations are welcome and can be mailed to Jacqui Goyette-Vitello, 275 Cedar St., Cohasset MA 02025.

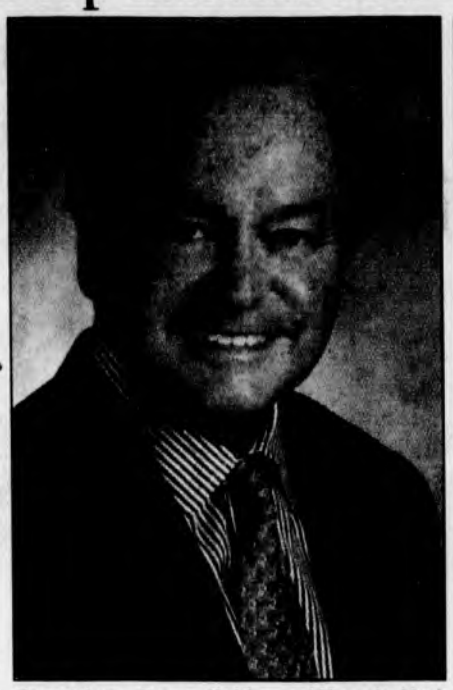
Spring fling, art show fundraiser for school

On Saturday, May 15, the Carriage House School, offering a Toddler Program and Preschool classes for children from ages 16 months to 5 years, will host it's bi-annual fundraiser, Spring Fling. This year, the school will have a fun-filled evening with drinks, hors d'oeuvres, entertainment and a silent and live auction.

Spring Fling will be held at the Carriage House School, 23 North Main St., in Cohasset from 7 to 11 p.m. The evening will kick off with a silent auction offering a vast array of items to bid on in support of the Carriage House. One of a kind items include handmade jewelry and specialty items for the home, as well as a pair of boxing gloves signed by Muhammad Ali.

The Live Auction will commence later in the evening and Anthony Everett, co-anchor of NewsCenter 5, will be the auctioneer for the evening. Live Auction items will feature fabulous packages including a weekend in Vermont, Boston Red Sox tickets and a stay at a Nantucket home, as well as beautiful children's art items made by the Carriage House School children.

Homemade hors d'oeuvres will be served as well as an assortment of desserts. Lively music from DJ Tom Bleakney, drummer of the Mitchell Brothers Band will keep things moving until 11 p.m.



Tickets to Spring Fling are $25 per person and may be purchased at the door with cash or check. Please call the school at 781-383-9785 if you have any questions.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY EVENTS

The Cohasset Historical Society program committee has planned two exciting events for May. Geologist, Peter Dillon, will lead an exploration of Cohasset granite on Sunday afternoon, May 16. The group will leave from the Society headquarters at the Pratt Building at 1:30 for a 2-1/2 to 3 hour tour of sites around town. Attendees should dress in comfortable, weather appropriate clothing and footwear.

On May 19, the Historical Society welcomes Leslie Silvia who will discuss her mother's book, "Once Upon An Island." The event will be held at the Historical Society's headquarters at the Pratt Building, 100 South Main St., at 7:30 p.m.. This is a free lecture open to the public as well as Society members. Light refreshments will be served.

POST PROM PARTY

The CHS prom is coming up on Friday, May 28 and the Post Prom Party is going to be a wonderful way for the prom-goers to continue their evening into the wee hours of the morning in a fun, safe and entertaining way. What is needed at this time are chaperones for the event. If you are a parent of a junior student, this is the best way to help out in a super situation and learn the ropes for next year when it is your child's turn at the prom. Anyone who has a senior student as a babysitter, friend, or who just wants to make a difference by helping out should volunteer for this great event.

The location is at Cohasset Middle/High School and the times needed are from 2-5 am or from 11 at night to 2 a.m. Yes, the times are tricky but it is a way for us to feel young again and stay up all night! Why not, it is only for one night and it is truly a fun experience. It is also rewarding to know that the kids are safe and having a really nice time. For more information call Stephanie Noble at 781-383-6278

That is all for this week. All news and event information needs to be received no later than Mondays by 5 p.m. in order to be seen in that week's column.

House builds some changes into 40B

Affordable housing law stays on books

By Michael Levenson
MICHAEL.LEVENSON@STATEHOUSENEWS.COM

The House voted 151-1 Monday to preserve but overhaul the state's 34-year-old affordable housing law, saying some communities in Massachusetts are being crushed by sprawling developments.

Under the 1969 law, developers in communities with less than 10 percent affordable housing can avoid local zoning and land use restrictions if they agree to make 25 percent of the proposed units affordable.

But this is only a first step, explains state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. The bill now goes to the Senate and then to the Conference Committee where differences between the House and Senate versions are worked out.

Bradley described his support and that of state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, as "conditional at this point."

"This is not near being done," Bradley said. "It could be the same thing that played out two years ago – when we ended up fighting it (40b bill)."

On the House floor, proponents credited the law with creating about 22,000 homes for people under 80 percent of the median income in Massachusetts. Called the anti-snob zoning law, they said it has helped diversify suburbs and enable long-time residents to remain in communities with soaring property values.

But opponents said developers have used the law as a wedge to drive giant developments into some communities, against the wishes of residents and local officials. Their pleas for relief helped drive the bill in the House, though many amendments to the bill offered by suburban lawmakers were defeated.

Under the bill communities are offered several forms of relief.

Bradley says one significant change would allow communities to reject 40b projects that could negatively impact a town's water quality or supply. He cited Cohasset's 200-unit AvalonBay project, which is near that town's drinking water supply, as an example.

Another amendment would allow a community to count 75 percent of an assisted living or senior housing project that includes a down payment and rent, such as Hingham's 2,000-unit Erickson project. Bradley described the project as a hybrid under 40b because it is not really home ownership and not really rental. Currently Hingham is only guaranteed that 10 percent of the Erickson units will count.

"Adopting that amendment would be significant boost to the Town of Hingham," Bradley said.

Communities that increase their affordable housing stock by 2 percent per year would also be granted a one-year break from the law. Communities would be allowed to count state mental health and mental retardation homes, as well as other forms of state-sponsored affordable housing, toward the 10 percent goal.

Communities would also be given a list of size criteria to allow them to reject the largest developments. Projects deemed inappropriate because of surrounding land uses, proximity to transportation, services, public utilities and design could also be rejected.

Many of the changes grew out of a task force appointed last year by Gov. Mitt Romney to overhaul the law. House lawmakers also held hearings around the state and visited buildings constructed under the law.

Lawmakers rejected an amendment 112-42, which was offered by Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, that would have allowed communities to adopt another affordable housing law, instead of Chapter 40b.

Under Hynes' proposal, communities that required developers to make at least 10 percent of the units in a project affordable would be allowed to suspend the anti-snob zoning law. Hynes called the existing law a "nightmare" and a "failure" and said his plan — known as inclusionary zoning — would offer communities "a second pathway" to affordability.

Bradley, who backed Hynes' proposal, said many Republicans did not. He surmised they were "in the fold" of the Romney administration, to speak, which supported the task force report.

Bradley and Hynes have an ally in the Senate. State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said if the bill that comes out of the Senate Housing Committee does provide substantial 40B reform, he will propose a series of amendments to ensure more reason affordable housing counts for communities; and more local control over 40B projects. Hedlund said he is prepared for a fight on the Senate floor if necessary.

Many urban legislators supported the bill, calling it a reasonable response to aggrieved suburban legislators. Some suburban legislators also supported the bill, but others called the law a total failure and offered more sweeping changes, which were rejected.

The Archdiocese of Boston supported the bill, saying it would enable the church to continue to pursue its mission of building housing for the poor. The law is also known by its chapter name, 40B.

"This bill provides important protections for communities while maintaining Chapter 40B intact as one of the most useful tools in the Commonwealth for promoting the needs of the housing deprived," said Gerry D'Avolio, executive director of the Massachusetts Catholic Conference, the church's policy arm.

Lobbyists representing builders said the bill went too far in offering communities relief.

The Massachusetts Home Builders Association released a statement saying, "To make any changes to the law at this time will only worsen the severe housing shortage that is threatening the social and economic well being of the Commonwealth."

Rep. Jeffery Sanchez, D-Jamaica Plain, voted against the bill.

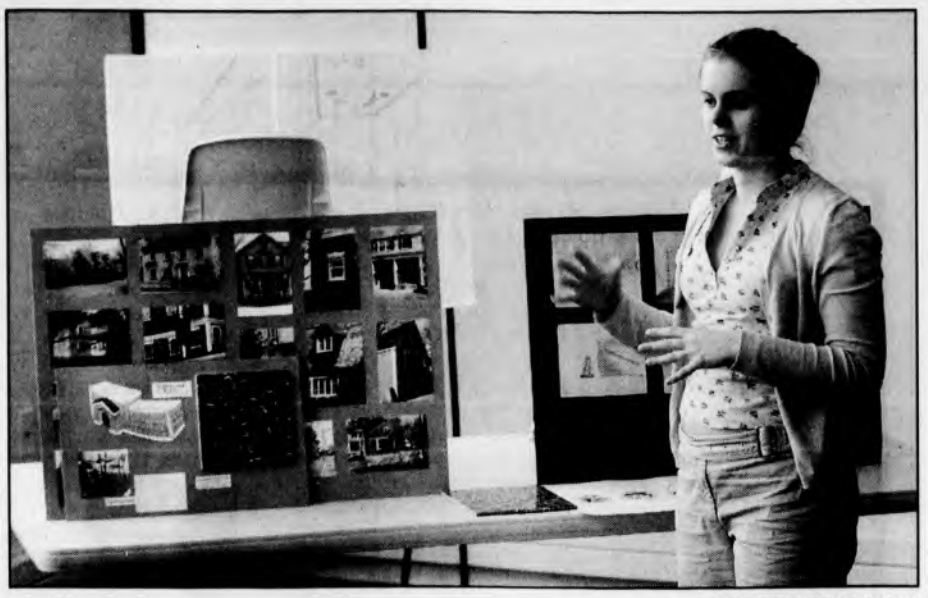
A world of ideas on exhibit

Children's museum hosts special event

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM



With all permanent exhibits for the Our World Global Children's Museum slated to be up and running by the fall of 2005, members of the museum staff have been busy compiling possible ideas for their designs. To that end, students from the Massachusetts College of Art were invited to put their creative skills to work for the museum, and design sample exhibits which will serve as a springboard for the museum to work from in the future.

By incorporating the younger perspective of college students, Program Coordinator Michele Dupuis said it expands the range of ideas the museum will be able to utilize in the final exhibit designs. While all exhibits will be designed and built by professional designers in the end, many of the ideas brought forth from the students will affect what is ultimately built. Dupuis said the museum will be putting the design of the exhibit project out to bid, and will accept the designer that best conveys the museum's goals.

The idea to ask students from the college to create sample designs came from Tom Newhall, chairman of the Exhibit Design and Building Committee. "I went to Mass Art," said Newhall, and thought working with its design program would be a win-win situation for all involved.

The museum, which is located in the 1929 wing of the former Osgood School, is devoted to creating opportunities for children throughout the South Shore to gain global awareness through play spaces, rotating exhibits, and programming. The sample exhibits were designed around the museum's goal and all appealed to the five senses.

Realizing the need for children to focus on their own immediate culture before being able to expand and learn about others, Mass Art student Liz Ashworth's presentation incorporated pieces of Cohasset's heritage. She brought photos of Cohasset Village, historic sites, and points of interest around town. She even designed a front desk, which would be shingled to mimic many buildings around town, with the option of including a built-in dog house for a potential furry friend. She also brought samples of tiles that could be used on the floors, which looked like photographs of green grass close up, or river rocks, which could be used in different sections of the building. As a special treat to appeal to the whimsical nature of children, Ashworth suggested having an upside-down gift shop, where children could "walk on the ceiling" of a house which looks as if it just crashed.

Massachusetts College of Art student Liz Ashworth explains her idea for the Our World Global Children's Discovery Museum in Cohasset.

Ashworth suggested having an upside-down gift shop, where children could "walk on the ceiling" of a house which looks as if it just crashed.

Alicia Fairclough said she did some research and found children learn better when they are interacting, which is why she chose to incorporate eating food from other cultures in her exhibit. She said by exposing children to food from different cultures, a bridge can be built as they realize while their food may be different, everyone eats. She also said it would be great if a guest chef could visit the museum once a month to cook exotic dishes, but on a day to day basis, having a vending machine with food or candy from different cultures could serve as an alternative.

Dupuis said if the vending machine was coin operated, it could open up the door to having an exchange station for different currencies and children could learn about the value of American money versus money from around the globe while eating a tasty treat.

The museum was given a giant wooden rhinoceros carving, which will be placed somewhere in the museum, and Lauren Nuhall thought it could be turned into the unofficial mascot for the museum. She suggested having a series of paintings outside the exhibits, which could have words for those children who do know how to read, but would tell a story through the illustration, depicting the different activities for children in the exhibit. While the larger wooden "mother rhino" would stand watch in the museum, the baby rhino in the pictures would encourage children to explore on their own, while not straying too far. The baby rhino could serve as a traveling companion throughout the museum exhibits.

Katerina Filatov suggested having a musical exhibit which could incorporate sounds from various cultures. "Children love to play drums," she said. She also suggested having musical games that would play the sounds of different countries, to help children recognize the different melodies around the world.

Dupuis said she and Newhall will show the designs to members of the Board of Trustees. She said she will also be in touch with members from the class, as many have shown interest in expanding their designs, as well as helping the museum get up and running.

Campaigning has no place in the classroom

The issue has crossed my path several times in the last week. First, it was in Barnstable where a parent questioned all the teacher "Bush bashing" in schools that his children were being subjected to. Then, while at Norwell High School recently I saw a sign in an office for "John Kerry for President."

It got me thinking: Should schools be promoting a particular party or espousing certain views on issues?

I consider myself a political junkie. Nothing gets my adrenaline flowing like a hotly contested election race. I think I'm at my best when it's an election night and we are at deadline, scurrying around trying to get the up-to-date election results and feedback from campaign trails. It's a time when most everyone in the newspaper business ratchets it up a few notches.

I'm also a big fan of cable TV during election season and especially voting night. I'm glued to the set listening to all the pundits analyze every piece of information they can get their hands on.

But all that being said, I don't believe schools or the classrooms are the appropriate setting for people to bash a particular candidate or promote one either. I'm all for getting students energized about elections and the importance of voting. I can think back to my own high school experiences in history or current events classes and we often spoke about the issues relevant to the day and the political process. That's an important part of the learning experience.

It got me thinking: Should schools be promoting a particular party or espousing certain views on issues?

We do, however, have to draw the line when it comes to pointing out specific candidates. Teachers and administrators need to stick to the facts about each candidate, where they stand on the issues and what is being said on the campaign trail. But given their captive audience in their classroom, they should use their authority carefully so as not to overly influence the students.

A sign on a school administrator's desk promoting John Kerry sends a very strong message to students. When pressed, a staffer admitted she thought the sign might be taking the political discussion a bit too far. She wasn't surprised by it, though. A teacher at another Cape school suggested there was too much Bush bashing going on in the classrooms.

"Look, he hasn't exactly been the education president, that's for sure," the teacher explained. "I'm not big on his policies either, but my personal political views shouldn't be the sole issue of discussion in the classroom. You'd be amazed how much of it is going on right now."

Many districts have a clearly stated policy against promoting political candidates. As this election season heats up and gets uglier as the candidates race to the November finish line, schools need to be reminded to talk issues and be even handed. I do applaud the teachers and administrators who want to encourage more student involvement in the political process.

Let's not take it too far, though.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Looking for money

TO THE EDITOR:

As we all know, the town is in very tight financial straits. It has come so far as to have a teacher's wife leading a major fund raising campaign to get three teachers back into the system. Luckily, the former town manager did not take out from next year's budget the $30K needed to cover the costs of benefits for these three teachers.

With the abrupt resignation of the town manager there is talk of looking into changing some aspects of the town manager act before a new one is hired. One thing that is necessary is to make sure that the Selectmen tighten up their general supervision over all matters affecting the interests and welfare of the town.

One area that needs a closer look are the one-dollar leases that the town has negotiated.

Now that the Lighthouse Keeper's Corporation is turning into a profitable endeavor able to give grants to other organizations, maybe the town should be looking to have a few expenses covered like fire and police protection. In this lease the town is responsible for the parking lot and the Community Garden Club maintains the gardens while the Lighthouse Keeper's maintain the building with the money derived from the rent of the two apartments and the function hall. The town organizations do appreciate the ability to use the function hall at no expense but the taxpayers are shouldering an additional burden to allow this organization to accrue capital.

Under Mark Haddad tax funds were diverted from the Hagerty Committee earmarked for the completion of the harbor recreation area to the Hagerty building under the new one-dollar lease. Now the town's planned recreation area is not finished and the parking that the taxpayers paid for is now limited. Our tenant, the Center for Student Coastal Research, besides running fee for service programs, is subletting five art studio spaces in the Hagerty building.

The lease for the Our World Museum has been altered already. Under theirone-dollar deal they were supposed to provide a new playground for the children to replace the state of the art 10-year-old play park that Mark Haddad had torn down. At Town meeting, funds were allocated to the playground and the town has paid for other roof work on the leased part of the building that was not included in the $4 million library renovation.

Our selectmen should start exercising closer supervision on some aspects of our income and spending and think along the lines of bringing the town under a more fiscally responsible pattern.

Montessori auction support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

It is with heartfelt thanks that I write to you with respect to so many local businesses that contributed to the Montessori Community School's annual auction fundraiser, held on May 7 at the Red Lion Inn. Our school serves approximately 240 students, raging in age from 18 months to 15 years of age, who come from 14 surrounding South Shore towns.

Because of the local business support, we were able to raise nearly $165,000 in net revenue that will not only enrich our existing student body, but allow us to charter a scholarship program specifically dedicated to children that otherwise would not be able to attend our school.

On behalf of the students and faculty at TMCS, I would like to thank the following contributors for their steadfast support of our school: Atlantic Bagel Co., Buttonwood Books and Toys, Cohasset Cycle Sports, Cohasset Dog Wash, Cohasset Harbor Inn & Resort, Cohasset Jewelers, Cohasset House of Pizza, Cohasset Plaza Liqours, Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club, Cohasset Travel, Curtis Liquors, Dean and Hamilton Realtors, DiNero's Restaurant, Donna Green Studio's, Dramatic Kitchens, ek Designs, Fitness First Plus, Flemings of Cohasset, Froio Landscaping Co, Hassan Sign Co., J.J.'s Dairy Bar, KTB Designs, Lapels Dry Cleaning, Nobles, North River Frame Co., Perfect Edges Corp., Ports & Company, The Red Lion Inn, Rudolph Adamo Salon, Shaws, Shoe Market for Kids, South Shore Music Circus, Stop & Shop, Sweet Surprises, The Craft Factory, The Good Sport, The Shoe Market, The Village Greenery, Victoria's Pizza, Zia's Special Occasion Cakes.

Brick sidewalks are problematic

TO THE EDITOR:

The following letter was sent to selectmen and the Downtown Review Committee with a copy to the Mariner for publication.

I am writing to convey my dismay that my vote and comments are being ignored by some or misrepresented in your discussions regarding the downtown vitalization plan. I was at the town meeting discussion that discussed brick versus concrete for the downtown sidewalks. This discussion was late in the evening, and many people had left for home. For those of us remaining, we were there to listen to the presentation and cast our votes.

I, along with several others, expressed a desire to not have brick for the sidewalks. I have found brick walks in other downtown revitalized areas to present several problems: they are slippery when wet, they are uneven and heave regularly in our New England winters, and it is very difficult to shovel snow from them to a satisfactory condition that makes it safe to walk on. Transversing uneven brick in wheelchairs is difficult.

If my memory serves me correctly someone from the town government stated that the DPW was also not in favor of brick because of the problems with snow removal and maintenance. I am grateful to Ronnie McMorris who reminded you that you are attempting to ignore a town meeting vote.

Mr. Dormitzer's representation that we were voting on a "concept" rather than a choice between the cost and practicality of brick versus concrete is an insult to those of us who sat through the presentation, discussion and vote. And what does Mr. Dormitzer mean when he says that concrete is "inappropriate in a small town"? Concrete can be molded and shaped into many attractive presentations.

I hope you are not considering spending any of my tax money to undermine the town meeting vote. Citizens can petition and bring a new warrant article before town meeting if they are still longing for brick sidewalks. But please consider that a town meeting vote did occur and it should be followed unless it is changed through the same process.

HEALTH NOTES

Stings, bites, blisters and rashes – ouch!

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO MARINER

Now that it's outside weather, it's time to think about some of the common consequences of getting back to nature. According to Herman Ellemberger, M.D., Wright State Department of Emergency Medicine, here are a few things to look for in the outback — yard, that is.

• Stings: bees, wasps, and yellow jackets can produce minimal symptoms from the pain of a pinprick to major symptoms of trouble breathing and subsequent death.

If you have had an anaphylactic reaction to these stings (shortness of breath) you should have an "epipen" at home, in your car, and backpack if going hiking (auto injector of epinephrine, prescribed by your physician)

If you get stung, and have local inflammation and redness/swelling, pain, or itching, either live with it, or take Benadryl (available over the counter, 25 mg. every four hours, can take up to 50 mg every four hours)

If swelling and warmth develops at the site two days after the sting, go to your physician as this is an infection and will require antibiotics.

• Rashes: poison oak, sumac, and of course poison ivy.

Protection: clothing; long pants and shirt; Ivy Block, sold in pharmacies over the counter; apply prior to being outdoors and exposure. Contrary to myth, the rash is a result of the oil of the plant that causes an allergic reaction in most humans. If someone comes in skin-to-skin contact with an area that has this oil on it, then it will also be transmitted to them. Once the area has been cleaned with soap and water, then there is no more possible transmission. The liquid in the vesicles (blisters) that will form does not transmit the rash. To prevent spreading, don't scratch yourself unless you have washed your body. Vesicles that have popped can get infected. If any pus starts draining from the affected site or there is increasing surrounding redness or warmth, go see your physician.

Treatment at home: Benadryl (OTC, up to 50 mg every four hours) and 1 percent Hydrocortisone Cream (OTC) applied topically to affected areas. This works for some people but not others. If this doesn't work for you, your doctor can prescribe either an oral steroid or a stronger topical steroid. If prescribed, you should use these for at least seven days because the symptoms may flare up if you stop sooner

• Blisters. Protection: If going for an extended hike or backpacking trip, make sure your footwear is broken in. This is not the time to break shoes. Do not wear cotton socks! They lack the ability to 1) keep your feet warm, and 2) dry efficiently once wet. Wool or synthetic socks are recommended. Wool is warmer but will not dry as quickly, which is okay for a one day outing; or if out for multiple days, a synthetic liner can be used. Synthetic socks (polyester) work well at wicking moisture away from the skin and dry very quickly (one drawback, synthetic clothing will start to smell quickly if used repeatedly).

If a hot spot is brewing: Dr.Ellenburger has read that applying the tape over the hot spot works great. (no need for a donut) – (his words, not mine – as far as I'm concerned, there's never any need for a donut!)

If a blister forms: if it is filled with clear fluid, you may "pop" it with a sterile needle (heated with a flame) and the area should be cleaned as thoroughly as possible. if it is filled with blood, do not pop it! It may continue bleeding and will not stop. If any pus begins to drain out or there is increased warmth with surrounding redness, go see a doctor for a probable infection

• Bites. Spiders: They don't like you any more than you like them, but if you are bitten the two types to worry about are Brown Recluse: body 8-15 mm long; usually has a dark violin shaped spot on it's body and Black Widow; the female has venom, 2-2.5 cm body length, shiny black with a red hourglass on it's abdomen. If you are bitten, it's necessary to get immediate medical assistance. If you develop severe abdominal pain in the woods and remember having felt a bite earlier that you might have dismissed as mosquito, go to an emergency department. Make sure you let the physician know that you were outdoors and you felt a bite.

Ticks: Very simple, pull the tick off (applying alcohol to the tick will help get it off) and keep it. Take it and yourself to an emergency department. If you never noticed the tick bite, but then notice a bull's eye lesion on your body, go to your doctor. Also search yourself and children after time in the woods (mainly during spring and summer), and search your dogs too as they can carry them indoors.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Summer jobs going unfilled

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where they are having so much trouble finding help to fill summer jobs in the hotels and restaurants on the Cape and Islands that they are importing workers from as far away as the Virgin Islands.

Whatever happened to college kids?

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, a vacation job at a summer resort was a much sought after plum. The ranks of waiters and maids and such filled so quickly that you had to get your bid in early or be left out.

I still remember the job I had in the summer of '49, tending bar in the Boston House on Martha's Vineyard, and I recall the Fourth of July that year as one of the hardest days I ever worked, bending over to get beer from the chest.

You might say, I got the job under false pretenses. I had never tended bar in my life but I told the bosses, Lester and George, that I did and they believed it.

So, armed with the Old Mr. Boston Bartender's Guide, I set out for the Vineyard. The only drink I was really familiar with was a stinger (brandy and crème de menthe) but after studying Old Mr. Boston I felt I was ready for anything.

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, a vacation job at a summer resort was a much sought after plum.

Wouldn't you know it, the first drink I was called on to make was a salty dog. That was a new one on Old Mr. Boston, too. I had to ask the guy who ordered how to make, a rookie bartender's worst nightmare. It's gin and grapefruit juice with salt on the side, if you're interested.

This being 55 years later and the statute of limitations has long past, I don't think George and Lester will mind if I tell this story.

During the war, when everything was scarce, in order to get the good stuff, like Canadian Club, to keep the bar business going, the owners of the Boston House were forced to take several cases of a rot gut rum in order to get one case of Seagrams 7 or the like.

As a result, in the summer of '49, the wine cellar of the restaurant was piled high with cases of rum whose name escapes me now. It had been there so long that small flakes of a solid material were floating around in it.

When business was slow, one of the bartenders, Joe, or Matt, the unemployed opera singer, or me, went downstairs, opened a bottle, and strained the foreign material out through a cheese cloth and brought it upstairs to the bar.

Whenever a customer appeared drunk enough and ordered a rum drink, or even a Manhattan (whiskey and sweet vermouth) we were under orders to substitute what we called the house rum.

I was down on the Vineyard a couple of years ago. The Boston House is out of business. It's now a dance studio. I'll bet there was still some house rum left when the bar closed. And I'll bet George and Lester took it with them.

It's hard to visit the Vineyard nowadays without rubbing elbows with a celebrity. The only celebrity that ever came into the Boston House in the summer of '49 was an actor named Charles Ruggles, who was in a play at the island playhouse.

Charlie ordered a rum and coke. I made it. He sent it back. There wasn't enough coke in the glass.

Dressing up a strawberry dessert with a little Marsala

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The recipe consists of only three ingredients (yolks, sugar, booze) and the magic lies in the process.

We are entering strawberry season and, for my family, that means three weeks of overabundance from our 400-square-foot patch. We make preserves, eat strawberry shortcake for dinner, with cream, just-picked and warm from the garden, and we also serve them with a variety of toppings to provide a bit of variation.

One obvious choice is whipping together a zabaglione, a frothy, sweetened egg foam flavored with wine or fortified wine. Traditionally it is made with Marsala, but it can also be made using prosecco, champagne, or port. The recipe consists of only three ingredients (yolks, sugar, booze) and the magic lies in the process. The ingredients are whisked together and then slowly cooked with constant motion until the drab liquid is suddenly transformed. An Italian grandmother might measure out the sugar and Marsala using an eggshell, but I was looking for a more scientific approach.

I started with six large egg yolks (to serve four to six people). I tried using some portion of whites, but the dessert didn't have as rich a texture or taste and I scrapped that idea. Often zabaglione recipes call for one tablespoon of sugar to each yolk, but I found that for six yolks one-quarter cup of sugar offered up a pleasant sweetness. The sugar should be whisked into the yolks until they are light colored and smooth. This step insures that the zabaglione has the smoothest consistency and no flecks of yolks.

Marsala is the traditional ingredient for zabaglione. I found 1/4 cup contributed plenty of flavor. Liqueurs produced a heavy, boozy zabaglione. Another interesting ingredient, pear juice, was pleasant but lacked depth. It was also looser than the alcohol-based zabaglione. For a slight variation, you can substitute a tablespoon of liqueur when using white wine or champagne. The lesser alcohol content of the wine (compared to the marsala) and the stronger content of the liqueur even out, and the resulting zabaglione is not too heavy or dense.

The sugar and yolks should be whisked together until lemon colored and smooth, and then the booze should be added. The mixture should be placed over gently simmering water and whisked constantly until thick and falls back on itself in thick ribbons. Zabaglione should be served immediately. I also came across a recipe for a chocolate zabaglione from Lidia Bastianich that calls for adding three tablespoons of grated chocolate to the mixture. The resulting zabaglione is like a chocolate cloud or mousse. It is best made with Marsala and served over blueberries, raspberries or strawberries.

ZABAGLIONE AND STRAWBERRIES

Make sure that the strawberries don't just look good, but also taste good.

4 cups strawberries halved or quartered into bite-sized pieces
6 large egg yolks
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1/4 cup Marsala wine

1. Place the berries into individual serving bowls and set aside. Bring 1 inch of water to a gentle simmer in the bottom of a double boiler or a saucepan that will accommodate a metal or tempered glass bowl (such as Pyrex) without allowing it to touch the water. Whisk the yolks and sugar in the top of a double boiler or bowl until smooth and lemon colored. Whisk in the Marsala.

2. Place the mixture over the simmering water and whisk constantly until the mixture is light and very thick, about 5 to 7 minutes. The mixture should fall back on itself in thick ribbons and the whisk should leave a trail in the mixture for several seconds. Spoon over the berries and serve at once.

Serves 4 to 6

VARIATIONS WITH OTHER TYPES OF ALCOHOL

For a brighter tasting zabaglione you may substitute white wine or champagne for the Marsala. For additional flavor you can substitute one tablespoon of liqueur for one tablespoon of the wine. Fruit-flavored liqueurs such as Gran Marnier or Chambord work well. Red wine or port may also be used, resulting in zabaglione that is deeper in color and flavor.

CHOCOLATE VARIATION

Whisk three tablespoons of finely grated bittersweet or semisweet chocolate into the finished zabaglione. This variation is also good with blueberries or raspberries or a combination.

STRAWBERRIES WITH SOUR CREAM AND BROWN SUGAR

Another simple combination is sour cream and brown sugar. The strawberries should be kept whole and their green caps left on. For a quart of berries you should use about a cup of sour cream and a half-cup of brown sugar. The brown sugar should be free of lumps. You can serve the berries, cream and sugar family style with one central bowl of cream and sugar for an informal family dessert, or you may choose to allow each diner a small bowl of sugar and cream for themselves. If you choose the individual cream and sugar bowls, you may find you need additional quantities of both. In either case, the berries should be dipped first in the cream and then in the sugar. The balance of flavors is rich and refreshing. If you find you can't quite spare the ten minutes it takes to prepare the zabaglione, this may be the spring dessert for you.

Spring into wellness

Renew Yourself With Natural Wellness Technologies is the theme of an exciting presentation to be held at the library on Tuesday, May 18, at 7 p.m. and on Thursday May 20, at 1 p.m. If you have low energy, trouble sleeping, tired achy feet or legs, sore joints, or just want to have renewed energy and feel great, then this educational workshop is for you! Cohasset Nutritionist and Wellness consultant, Patricia Messing-Hague, will discuss innovative and unique ways to help the body heal itself and stay well, vigorous and energetic! Special guest speaker Carole Siegal of Cohasset will tell the story of her health renewal. This program is free and open to everyone. If you have questions, call Patricia Messing-Hague at 781-383-2410.

Tuesday Painters

The Tuesday Painters of South Shore Art Center are displaying their works at the library through July 1. Artists participating include Claire O'Callaghan and Tina Watson of Cohasset, Betty Rogers of Marshfield, Leo Harrington and Betty Tufankjian of Scituate, Barbara Walsh of Canton, Marjorie Murphy of Hingham, and Jane Flavell Collins of Duxbury. The paintings include many local scenes as well as those of Italy, Mexico and the Caribbean. An opening reception will be held on May 23, from 5 to 7 p.m. in the library's Meeting Room. Refreshments will be served and the public is invited to attend.

Large print books

Have been added to the collection. Fiction titles: "The Pearl Diver," by Jeff Talarigo. Beautifully written, this debut novel set in Japan in 1948, tells the tale of a 19-year-old pearl diver diagnosed with leprosy. "A Question of Blood: an Inspector Rebus novel," by Ian Rankin. The 14th novel in the series finds Scottish cop, John Rebus, investigating the suicide of a former soldier who murdered two students at an Edinburgh boarding school. "Hallowed Bones," by Carolyn Haines. The Delaney Detective Agency of Mississippi, staffed by southern belles, Sarah Booth Delaney and her friend Tinkie Richmond, investigates a case involving the murder of a miracle worker's baby.

Book sale

Check out the sale bookcase of used books, videos and books on tape located in the library's Community Room. Prices are reasonable (hardcover books, videos and books on tape, $1.00 and paperbacks, $0.25). All proceeds go to the Friends of the Cohasset Library.

Death penalty and income tax rollback on radar screen

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL C. LEVENSON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Just in time for election season, Gov. Mitt Romney returned two core Republican issues to the center of the political debate, calling for an income tax cut and the restoration of the death penalty.

Tax cuts and tough-on-crime policies have propelled Republican gubernatorial candidates since William Weld was first elected in 1990 and their resurgence comes at a propitious time for the state Republican Party.

The party is fielding its biggest team since 1990: 133 candidates have filed nomination signatures for 125 seats in the House and Senate, according to Republican officials. Many can now add the death penalty and tax cutting to their campaign arsenals.

For a time, it seemed both issues had dropped off the political radar here.

As a candidate, Romney pledged to roll back the income tax rate from 5.3 percent to 5 percent by the end of his first-term — in keeping with a 2000 ballot question. But a yawning budget gap and slow economic recovery made massive fee hikes and closing tax loopholes a greater priority for the governor.

As a candidate, he also pledged to legalize the death penalty for the first time since 1984, but the jailhouse slaying of former priest John Geoghan placed an emphasis on prison reform and a commission led by Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey brought forth proposals focused on helping ex-prisoners stay away from crime.

Neither issue disappeared entirely, however. A commission of forensics experts and legal minds was working behind the scenes to craft a "model" death penalty statute that would reduce, to the greatest extent possible, the risk of error.

And tax collections were slowly rebuilding. Despite an anemic recovery, collections are shattering conservative budget benchmarks, creating excess tax revenue, and in Romney's view, making a tax cut justifiable.

Both came to the fore during one press conference in the governor's briefing room. Romney unveiled the death penalty commission's report and then ushered the panel members off the stage to announce his call for an income tax cut, a request that caught many on Beacon Hill off guard.

Capital punishment and tax cutting energize Republican voters and some swing voters, as well.

The one-two served as a reminder that in an election year, it's important to follow up on campaign promises and tend to political bases. Capital punishment and tax cutting energize Republican voters and some swing voters, as well.

Romney has targeted his death penalty plan to what he calls the "worst of the worst": terrorists, cop killers and murderers who torture their victims are a few of the examples he cited. Under his tax-cut plan, the average taxpayer would receive a $100 break in the first year.

Democrats counter that a death penalty system that relies on humans can never be error-free and a tax cut isn't needed — a 2002 law will automatically trigger one, if revenues continue to pour into state coffers.

In recommending a tax cut, Romney also proposed spending more government money on homeland security and health care provider reimbursements, while depositing some of the projected surplus into the state's rainy day fund. Democrats may find the latter two options more appealing than the income tax cut.

The debates will shape much of the summer campaign season. "Every incumbent legislator that we are challenging is going to have to defend their positions on every issue, especially those who oppose the governor's reform agenda," said Dominick Ianno, executive director of the state Republican Party.

In other news:

• Romney softens stance on out of state gay marriages — Romney's legal counsel, Daniel Winslow, told city and towns clerks they did not have to ask for proof of a gay couple's residency, despite a 1913 law barring out-of-state gay couples from marrying in Massachusetts. Aides to Romney had previously said couples would have to show utility bills or mortgage statements proving their residency. But Winslow said couples could sign the marriage license application form, which includes an oath that their statements about residency are true.

• Romney defends 1913 law — As debate over the 1913 law widened, Democratic senators said they would try to repeal the law to allow gay couples from across the US to marry in Massachusetts. Citing its history as a statute used to prohibit interracial marriages, senators and gay rights advocates called the law discriminatory. Romney said it would respect the laws of other states, and he threatened to veto any repeal measure. "The idea that all of the same-sex couples from throughout the entire country could all come here, get married and go to their home states, in violation of the feelings of their own Legislatures and their own citizenry is, I think, a mistake," Romney said.

• Greenhouse plan released — Standing on the banks of the Charles River, Romney released a much-awaited 49-page Climate Protection Plan that includes 72 recommendations for reducing greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by 2010 and by an additional 10 percent by 2020. Among the recommended steps: helping low-income residents get rid of their oil burners to reduce their energy costs, introducing carbon pollution as a criteria when making state decisions on transportation funds, allowing drivers of clean cars to use the carpool lanes.

• State police leaders step down — State Police Colonel Thomas Foley and Lt. Colonel Bradley Hibbard stepped down. Foley said he was frustrated by the troopers' union threats to override his decisions with the governor's office. Romney said the resignations would not affect security planning for the Democratic National Convention.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on three roll calls from the week of May 3-7. There were no roll calls in the House last week.

COURTS AND NON-CITIZENS (H 4135)

Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to a bill making changes to a current law that prohibits a court from accepting a plea of guilty or no contest unless it advises the defendant that if he is not a United States citizen, a conviction may result in consequences including deportation or exclusion from admission to the United States. The law also allows the defendant to later change his plea to "not guilty" if the court failed to advise him and he suffered any of the consequences. Supporters said that the changes include tightening the procedures to ensure that the court properly advises defendants. They noted that the changes are important and would strengthen the current law that is designed to protect non-citizens from pleading guilty to a charge that has minimal consequences on the state level without being fully informed that a conviction can result in deportation by the federal government. The House has approved a different version of the bill and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Y

PSYCHOTROPIC DRUGS FOR CHILDREN (S 674)

Senate 37-1, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill creating a state task force to develop and post on the state's website a list of the 20 most commonly prescribed pyschotropic medications for children and each drug's side effect. Psychotropic drugs are ones that affect the mind through action on the central nervous system and include such well-known drugs as Prozac, Ritalin and Adderall. The measure also prohibits doctors from prescribing any of the 20 drugs for a minor unless he makes the task force's information available to the child's parent and explains the information if the parent is incapable of understanding it. Supporters said the bill would ensure that parents are aware of the possible adverse side effects of these controversial drugs and are able to make informed decisions about whether to allow their children to take the medication. Opponents offered no arguments. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Y

STUDY SINGLE-PAYER, UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE SYSTEM (S 686)

Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill requiring the state's division of health care finance and policy to study the fiscal impact, including the total cost of implementation, the potential long term costs and savings and an estimate of the amount of new state revenue necessary if the Legislature approves a bill restructuring the current health care system into a single payer, universal health care system administered by the state. Some supporters said they support a state-run system and argued that this study is the first step towards creating one. They noted that the current system is a failure that includes skyrocketing premiums, struggling community hospitals, more than 400,000 uninsured people and seniors who go routinely without prescription drugs. Other supporters said they were far from ready to support a state-run system that would likely cost taxpayers billions of dollars but are open to looking into the costs and ramifications. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Y

ALSO UPON BEACON HILL

BAN WORKPLACE SMOKING- The House accepted the conference committee version of a bill banning smoking effective July 5 in most enclosed workplaces with one or more employees including offices, restaurants, bars and vehicles owned by state and local governments. The House and Senate had overwhelmingly approved different versions of the bill last fall. Exemptions include private residences not used as child care centers, rented rooms in hotels, motels, inns and bed and breakfasts, retail tobacco stores, smoking bars that derive more than 51 percent of their revenue from tobacco sales, patients in state hospitals and soldiers' homes and religious ceremonies in which smoking is part of the ritual. Nursing homes and substance abuse treatment facilities may apply for an exemption for a part of the facility to permit smoking. Another exemption is for "membership associations" when they are not open to the public. These associations range from some private country clubs and religious places of worship to American Legion halls and other non-profit entities that are organized for a charitable, educational, or social purpose. The bill also gives restaurants, bars and any other affected businesses a tax credit for any costs incurred after January 2000 in the purchase and installation of ventilation systems and other renovations made in the construction of designated smoking areas designed to reduce the presence of smoke in non-smoking areas. The conference committee bill still needs to be accepted by the Senate and then needs one more vote of approval in each branch prior to being sent to Gov. Romney's desk. The governor has expressed support for a statewide ban and is expected to sign the measure into law.

VIDEOTAPING AND NUDITY (S 177)- The Senate gave initial approval to a bill making it a crime to videotape, photograph or record in any way, without consent, the image of another person who is nude, partially nude or engaged in sexual activity. The proposal imposes up to a $10,000 fine and/or 2.5-year prison sentence on violators.

LOCAL TURKEYS AND PRODUCE (S 1200)- The Senate gave initial approval to a measure prohibiting turkeys, fruit and vegetables for sale to be labeled or advertised as "native" or "local" unless the name of the state of origin is included. Sponsors say that many consumers purchase food that they believe is locally produced in Massachusetts but is actually "locally" produced in another state.

Injuries catching up to CHS laxers

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It's a battle against attrition at the moment for the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team.

Two wins and a tie over the last week have gotten the Lady Skippers back in the hunt for playoff spot, at 4-6-1. Following a somewhat disappointing 6-6 tie with Marshfield, last Thursday, the Cohasset girls bounced back with a 12-11 win over Martha's Vineyard and a 9-5 win over Barnstable.

The questión is will they have enough healthy and experienced bodies to see to it that this good work pays off.

Key senior defender Kristen Reardon returned after a three game absence in Tuesday's win over Barnstable, but Lauren Rizzotti was unavailable due to a wrist injury and fellow key junior Lisa Spirito was limited to just five minutes due to a leg injury. Captain Libby Miekelham is already done for the year with a torn ACL, and several other regulars have been playing hurt.

"We're barely holding it together at the moment," conceded third year Cohasset High coach Torin Sweeney. "We're just not a team that has the kind of depth it takes to survive a couple of injuries to key players, and right now we've got several key injuries."

Rizzotti, one of the team's top two-way performers, was injured early in the second half of Saturday's 12-11 win over Martha's Vineyard. The junior had four goals and an assist and her team was up by six goals at the time she was injured. The Vineyarders proceeded to score the game's final five goals over the game's final seven minutes to pull within one.

"The clock saved us there," said Sweeney. "I had a lot of tired girls on the field at the end. I try to rest them as much as I can, but when the game is on the line you look to your experienced players, and I'm running thin on them right now."

Team leading scorer Nicole Turgiss had three goals versus the Vineyarders, freshman Lindsay Durkin a pair, while Spirito, senior captain Ashley Faber and sophomore Cassie

CHS tracksters continue to make the most with what they've got

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset boys and girls track teams completed the regular season on Monday, following defeats on both sides against the Mashpee Falcons.

The girls finished up the 2004 campaign with a 2-5 record; the boys concluded the spring with a 0-7 mark.

Jenn Buckley and Nicole Whitney led the way for the Skippers at the meet, each picking up four first-place victories on the day.

Buckley earned her wins in the javelin and the discus, as well as the mile-run and, as a member of Cohasset's 4x400 relay team (along with Sara Malone, Lisa Musto and Mary Silvia).

Whitney received her "firsts" in the 100- and 200-yard sprints, as well as winning both the long- and triple-jump.

Lindsay Kennedy also had a strong afternoon for the locals, placing in three events at the match (2nd place in the 100; and 3rd place nods in both the 200 and triple jump).

In addition, Silvia gave a strong performance, taking a first-place mark in the 800-yard run, as well as a third-place finish in the long jump.

For the boys: Erik Belz and Peter Bunstien were the big point-getters for the Skippers. Belz took home a first-place victory in both the 100 and the javelin, as well as a second-place decision in 400-yard sprint (a new event for the senior). Bunstien took a second-place win for his efforts in the 100, in addition to a third-place completion (in the 200).

After the match, Coach Al LaFontaine spoke of the seemingly disappointing win-loss numbers for Cohasset this year.

"The records are deceiving," Coach LaFontaine stated. "For us this year, the big problem was the number of kids we had. With only 16 kids competing (11 for the girls and five for the boys),

Split decisions not good enough for laxmen

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The good news is the Cohasset High boys lacrosse team is making steady gains in most important areas, at least that's the opinion of first year head coach Stu Curran.

The bad news, or shall we say less than great news, is the Skippers won one and lost one over the past week, and a .500 tally is simply not good enough right now.

The Skippers head into this afternoon's scheduled meeting at Sandwich with a record of 4-6 (3-3 in Pilgrim Conference play), right where they were last week at this time in their chase of a postseason berth, two games under the magic .500 number.

"If we can keep playing the way we played Tuesday, especially in the second half, I'm confident we can make a run at the playoffs," said Curran, referring to the 10-2 win at Hanover earlier this week. "We played very well defensively, and we took advantage of our offensive chances too.

"We made some adjustments at half, changed a few of our offensive sets, and the guys did a nice job of running it, finding the open man and being more patient with our shots. It was a good game."

Skippers 10, Hanover 2

After going into the halftime break with a modest 3-1 lead over the host Indians, the Skippers opened it up quickly in the third quarter, and then just basically played stall ball for the better part of the fourth quarter.

Senior captain Mike Rasmussen and junior Jake Previte had three goals apiece, with Previte also adding an assist. Sophomore

'Hungrier" CHS girls tennis team avenges first loss in over a year

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

The hope for the members of the Cohasset girls tennis team, following their first loss in over a year, was it would make them a little hungrier.

Consider it done. The team has been dominating, as usual, in their recent four-match winning streak, including a 4-1 victory last Wednesday over the Ursuline squad that dealt them that loss.

Unlike the first match between the two sides at Milliken, the Lady Skippers had all of their players available. Still, the team had to work hard for the victory.

Aside from number one singles, where Liz Stone breezed to victory, Cohasset had four hard-fought matches to contend with. One of the best came in number two doubles, with Emilie Sullivan and Corey Evans earning a 6-4, 6-3 win.

After a set that was "not an easy 6-4," according to head coach Gigi Meehan, the duo found themselves down early in the second set before rallying for the win.

The coach said the other matches had a similar feel to them, and the fact that her team had been through those kinds of battles before helped lead them to a win.

"Our girls had the advantage in experience," Meehan said. "I told them to just use all your match experience and slow things down."

In number three singles, Rachel Garber took on a talented opponent in Ursuline's Megan McCarthy, who had won her match in Cohasset in the first meeting. Garber came out on top this time, 6-4 and 6-4.

After jumping out to a 5-0 lead in the second set, the Cohasset

Losing streak reaches six for CHS baseballers

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

While most South Shore League baseball teams were playing a game or two to stay fresh during the April vacation week, the Cohasset nine did relatively little. And some would say they're still paying for it.

Monday's 5-3 setback to South Shore League rival Carver made it six losses in a row for the Skippers since they came back from vacation, and dropped them to 3-8 overall.

"I honestly don't think we've gotten back to playing the way we were prior to vacation," said second year Skippers coach Al Gallotta. "And to be honest, it's been a little bit discouraging. We haven't been playing very good baseball and we've really taken it on the chin a few times."

Indeed, the Skippers have been outscored 69-15 over the six-game losing streak, with Monday's loss representing the closest they have come to tasting victory since an April 15 lambasting of South Shore Christian Academy.

Of course, Coach Gallotta would have liked to play a game or two over the vacation, or at least had a few good practices, but several factors beyond his control got in the way of those plans, not the least of which was several of his key players heading hither and yon for the break.

Renovations on the team's home Milliken Field were also slated to take place over the vacation week, with new placements of bases and some re-sodding called for. That projected one week undertaking has hence tripled in length, forcing the Skippers to play their scheduled home games as road games these past two weeks.

"So, while other teams were staying sharp with games and practices, we were forced to work out on the outfield grass," said Gallotta, "so you could pretty much forget a regular infield practice during that time, as well as a few other things.

"It's also not a lot of fun playing all of your games on the road."

Now, Gallotta, who coached baseball for 27 years at Archbishop Williams before retiring as that school's Athletic Director and coming over to Cohasset High in 2002, is an old baseball man, and old baseball men don't like to make excuses. However, he almost makes an exception in this case.

"I don't like to sound like I'm making excuses," he said. "The bottom line is we're not playing good baseball, and it's up to us to turn that around. I will say, though, that we seem to have lost all sense of continuity. How much the vacation had to do with that, I'll leave that for others to say."

The pitching, in particular, has been disappointing. Staff ace Ted Straughn has been struggling with his control and senior captain Mike Dooley has likewise been up and down.

There have been close to as many walks as innings pitched over the last six games, creating a good number of combustible situations that have wound up blowing up more often than not, frequently with the help of a little slipshod defense.

"Yeah ,we're not making all the plays we should be in the field either," conceded Gallotta.

Then there is the offense. Clearly, 26 hits and 12 runs in the five games prior to Monday's loss is not going to get it done.

Only junior Louis Blanco continues to produce consistently. The third year starting catcher was batting at a robust .483 clip (14-for-29) through last week's action. The only other player on the team still hitting over .300 is Mike Dooley (.333, 11-for-33).

The longtime coach did say, though, that the defense was better in last week's losses and also that he was encouraged by a solid outing on the mound last week from sophomore Chris Bryan.

Despite it all, Gallotta insists he is not at the point of giving up on the team's postseason chances. Following Monday's loss, the Skippers were faced with having to win six of their final seven games in order to qualify for the postseason for the first time in recent memory.

"We've got a pretty good number of winnable games coming up," he noted. "If our pitching can get back to where it was earlier, I think that will help a lot. The non-league games we have left are games we can win, but we're obviously going to have to make a little hay with our league schedule as well."

The Skippers are slated to host Harwich today and then have a week off. They'll meet Holbrook in non-league play next Thursday and Friday, first away then home. That will be followed by two non-league games with Sacred Heart (there on May 24, here on May 27) sandwiched around the final league game, a home date with Mashpee on the 25th.

Rosano chipped in with solo tallies.

In the win over Barnstable, Turgiss led the charge with four goals, with Durkin again scoring two and Rosano, Faber and Spirito also getting on the board.

Coach Sweeney lauded the play at the defensive end of the recently returned Reardon, as well as sophomore Molly Kirk and netminder Joanna Hamilton.

The kind of late collapse the CHS girls suffered against the Vineyarders has been an all too common theme of late. The Skippers were up 7-1 on Barnstable at half and then almost got caught in the second half as they went into slowdown mode in an effort to preserve their key players. This approach did actually bite them in the 6-6 tie with Marshfield, as they were outscored 5-1 in the second half.

"We need to play 40 minute rather than 50 minutes games," joked Sweeney. "I'm really plagued right now by the thought that Marshfield tie could be the difference between us making tourney or not making it."

And that, of course, is what it's all about right now.

The Lady Skippers must net no worse than four wins and a tie over their remaining seven games.

Sweeney figured yesterday's game at Cape Cod Academy could actually be the linchpin to these hopes. The Lady Skippers will host the same Cape Cod Academy team next Thursday.

"We barely got by Cape Cod Academy last year, and they didn't lose anyone to graduation, so we're expecting a war," noted Sweeney on Tuesday. "If we can find a way to beat them (on Wednesday) that would give us a lot of confidence going into the last six games, and especially for the home game with (Cape Cod Academy) next week."

Sweeney figures his team has a very good shot of sweeping a home-and-home series with Nantucket (on the island this Saturday and at home to close out the regular season on May 25) and topping first year varsity team Hanover on the 24th. He concedes, however, his team may have a much tougher go of it with Duxbury next Tuesday and Bourne a week from Friday.

"So you can see a lot comes down to the first Cape Cod Academy game," he reiterates.

CHS softball team ends four game losing streak

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Ending a four game losing streak, the Cohasset High softball team won Tuesday's game and, in so doing, improved its winning record by one win over last year.

The Skippers defeated South Shore Christian Academy, 28-11, improving their record to 5-7.

Prior to the win, the Skippers lost to Carver, 16-4, on Monday, then lost to Mashpee 18-17, in eight innings in a makeup game on Saturday and to Harwich 18-3, on Friday and last Thursday to Abington, 23-1.

According to Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick, the Skippers played mostly freshmen against the rather new SSCA team.

Leading the Cohasset players in hits were Caitlin Condon, five-for-five, Cathy James, five-for-six, and Erin Liddell, three-for-four.

Other top Cohasset hitters were senior captain Danielle Pinkus, two doubles and a single, Catherine Doyle two doubles, single and two walks, Melissa Crowley-Buck two-for-five and Casey Anderson, a double.

Against Carver, the big problem for Cohasset were errors, like 10 of them. The game started out tight with a scoreless first inning. Carver things started happening in the third with four hits, and five Cohasset errors, good for five runs.

It was hard to get a handle on the Mashpee win, since Mashpee had eight hits, compared to 18 for Cohasset.

However, the handle was discovered when Cohasset stats revealed 11 errors, 10 wild pitches and 10 walks by Cohasset pitchers.

Anderson was three-for-five and Caitlin Gontarz was three-for-four. Also coming up with two hits or better were Liddell, Anderson and Pinkus.

The Harwich win was a no-hitter against Cohasset, with the game called in the sixth inning on the mercy rule.

In the game prior to Harwich, Cohasset lost a 23-1 decision to Abington. It marked the 39th straight league win for the Green Wave.

Abington's Lauren Conway was the top hitter with three hits, including a leadoff homer in the first inning.

At the start of the week, Abington was leading the South Shore League with an undefeated record of 9-0, and an overall record of 11-1. Carver was tied with Hull and Harwich for second place at 5-3, followed by Cohasset at 3-6. Mashpee was at 2-5, and Norwell at 0-8.

junior lost momentum and found herself facing a 5-4 deficit. She settled down in the next game, however, to finish off her opponent.

In a match the week before with Norwell, Garber also had a big lead in the first set and lost. This time around, Meehan said her player was able to finish her points and not lose control of the match.

"I said, 'Think about your Norwell match, and use that experience,'" Meehan said. "She had to make an impact in what was going on. That Norwell match gave Rachel the experience she needed to win that one."

The team of Courtney Caron and Chelsea Grossman continued to show why they are one of the best pairs in the state, as they took their number one doubles match, 6-4 and 6-3, over Ursuline's Kendra Butters and Brooke Haynes.

Holly Graham lost her match in number two singles, but made a rousing comeback from a 4-0 deficit in the first frame and almost took the set.

Skippers 4, Abington 1

The following day, Cohasset returned home to face Abington. Against a weaker opponent, the Skippers took the opportunity to rest some of their top players and give some younger girls match experience. Emilie Shea, Emma Grinnell and Casey Cavanaro all contributed to a 4-1 victory over the Green Wave.

Shea, a sophomore, and Grinnell, a junior, took straight-set victories in number two and three singles, respectively. While Grossman won at number one singles, Cavanaro teamed with Caron for an impressive doubles win. Cavanaro showed a versatile game and appears to be a good prospect for the future of Cohasset tennis.

Sophomores Christie Muir and Kate McBride teamed up in number two doubles, and lost a tough match to Abington's team of Kaitlyn Costa and Lindsey Welch.

broken leg, added his first varsity goal and did a very good job all game of getting into position and getting off quality shots, according to Coach Curran.

Solo tallies were also contributed by Ryan Tufts, Rob Carpenter and Sam Steele.

Much of the offense, though, ran through sophomore attacker Aidan Buick (two assists).

"Aidan showed some real good patience all game and really settled our offense," reported Curran. "He did a very good job of handling the ball and made some real nice decisions and passes. He kept the ball moving."

Of course, the coach thought the win was fueled first and foremost by the defense, and he singled out for praise senior captain Conor Buick and freshman Jeff Brown for the jobs they did marking up on Hanover offensive standouts Mike Simmons and Nick Riordan, respectively.

"I just can't say enough good things about Conor," said Curran. "Game in and game out, he just shuts the other team's best attackman down, and (Tuesday) was no exception.

"And Jeff Brown did just an outstanding job on a very good player. Nick Riordan is a big, strong, athletic kid, but Jeff just stayed with him the whole time and made things very tough on him.

"The defense as a whole really did an outstanding job, though. Mike Devine and Casey Coleman also continue to do very good things in our end, and Nick Murphy was strong in goal."

Hingham 8, Skippers 3

The Skippers defense did a noteworthy job in this one too, played last Friday on the road. Unfortunately, their Hingham counterparts were even better.

"That was the best team defense we've seen all year," said Curran of the Hingham backline. "They just shut our offense down. Of course, our offense seemed to get a little anxious, and there were a lot of temporary breakdowns.

"For whatever reason, it seems every now and then that our guys almost forget about the concept of findign the open man or moving the ball quickly. This was one of those times, and Hingham was quick to capitalize on it.

"It's too bad, though, because our defense played very well too. We can build on the way we played in this one."

The coach again lauded the efforts of his entire longstick crew—Devine, Buick, Coleman and Jeff Brown-- as well as midfielders Jack Kovach, Trevor Brady and DeWayne Morris.

The Cohasset goals were scored by Jake Previte, Aidan Buick and Devine, and Nick Murphy made seven stops in net.

Next up

The Skippers travel to Sandwich today (4 p.m. start) and to the island of Nantucket on Saturday (3 p.m. game start).

"I don't really want to look beyond that right now," noted Curran. "I think those are winnable games. In fact, I think we've got a lot of winnable games coming up. If we can somehow bottle what we did Tuesday, I absolutely feel we can make the playoffs."

Quality over quantity

it's a lack of depth that really hurts you in this sport."

He continued: "With the kids we did have this year, we had a lot of people who were consistently finishing with first and second place wins. The problem was, we didn't have the [personnel] to take the other top-three places in an event, and that's what hurt us."

COACHES MEET AT PLYMOUTH SOUTH

Prior to the season finale against Mashpee, the Cohasset girls took part in the 2004 League Coaches' Meet held at Plymouth South.

Jenn Buckley brought back a top-ten mark in her bread-and-butter javelin event (93-feet-6-inches), as well as a solid showing in the 800-yard run (2 minutes and 30 seconds).

Also, the Cohasset 4x800 relay team finished strong, posting an eighth-place nod with a 10:30 time.

THE WEEK AHEAD

With the regular season now behind them, the Skippers are looking ahead to the South Shore League Meets. The Lady Skippers compete first, heading out to Norwell—to face off with the SSL powers next Monday afternoon. The boys will then take the center stage, as the Skippers go head-to-head with the league rivals on Tuesday.

Both start times are scheduled for 3 p.m..

South Shore Sr. softball steps up to the plate

The South Shore Senior Softball League, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, opens its fourth season on Sunday, April 25. The team, open to all South Shore men aged 55 and older, meets at 10 am at the Central Park Field in Scituate.

Proving that age is no barrier to fun and athleticism, the "boys of summer" play up to three times a week in the league. Games are scheduled Sunday and Wednesday mornings at 10 am and Thursday evenings at 5 pm. There is also a traveling team available for interested players to compete in games across the state. Players can play once or three times a week, as they wish. The season runs well into the fall.

Kevin McLaughlin joins league founder Jim Hyde as league commissioner this year. Anyone interested in joining the league can call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 to obtain a registration form. Cost for the season is $30, which covers a shirt, hat and as much softball as one wants to play.

Girls teams make Mother's Day exciting

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse Report

Mother's Day nearly turned into a wash-out for the Cohasset girls youth lacrosse program, but it ended with two tight and exciting games.

After the Blue team was washed out by a Pembroke squad that stayed away from the rain, the Cohasset White team hosted Scituate and played beautifully until the sun came out to warm up the afternoon.

Isabelle Franklin scored four first-half goals and Olivia Sullivan two - one on a great cross-crease feed from Kaci Kucinski - as Cohasset raced out to a 6-2 halftime lead.

But as the day turned from sloppy to sunny, Scituate turned its game around completely, dominating play and converting on almost all of its chances. Scituate scored six goals - to none for Cohasset - over the first 22 minutes of the second half to take the lead.

After another Scituate score was called back due to a crease violation, Cohasset finally put together its best chances of the afternoon, with Elizabeth Saltonstall and Whitney Jaffe getting opportunities before Kucinski tied the game with about a minute left in the game. From there, Cohasset's defense - spearheaded by Abby Faulkner, Lauren Blaze, Molly McElgunn, Dylanne Axelson and Mimi Mahoney - put the brakes on a last-ditch Scituate run and the game ended in a 7-7 tie.

Thomson Jaffe finished the game with four saves in the Cohasset net.

At the 15-U level (grades 7 and 8), Scituate opened the scoring in the first minute of the game, and added a second goal just seconds later as it looked like Cohasset was headed for a long afternoon.

Instead, the quick deficit turned into a wake-up call, as Cohasset scored the next seven goals. Gabriella Flibotte scored twice lefthanded and once with her more natural right to lead the charge. Caitlin Mahoney pocketed the first and last goals of the half, Kaley Madge blasted home a direct-free position and Maura Barnes scored after circling behind the net to account for the goals, before Scituate closed the deficit just before the half.

With a 7-3 halftime lead, Cohasset's big worry was the kind of let-down the younger team suffered. Instead, Cohasset answered almost every Scituate score with a passing game that created great scoring opportunities. After two Scituate goals made the score 7-5, McKenna Teague buried a feed from Paige Strecker, Flibotte converted a feed from Barnes to answer another Scituate score, followed by Teague picking up a ground ball in traffic and drilling it past the Scituate goalkeeper for a 10-6 lead.

From there, Cohasset's defense stepped up and played great lock-down defense, forcing Scituate to burn clock without getting quality scoring opportunities. Rebecca Evans, Lindsay Hill, Natalie Hunt and Amanda Masotta did a lot of the work, but midfielders Sarah Brown, Madeline Leahy, Katie Gaumer, Lesen Haracz and Isabelle Franklin never let Scituate get free or capture a ground ball down the stretch.

After Katelyn Ryan fed Flibotte to answer a Scituate score, Cohasset's defense held until a meaningless goal with seconds remaining.

Grace Clougherty and Thomson Jaffe combined to make three saves in the Cohasset net.

On May 2, Cohasset traveled to Hingham where the Blue team suffered its first loss of the game while the other squads had close victories.

Isabelle Franklin's first-half hat trick helped the Cohasset White team jump out to a 4-3 halftime lead, with the fourth goal coming from the stick of Kaci Kucinski.

Elizabeth Saltonstall scored her first two goals of the year, and Franklin added her fourth on the day, as the team held on for a 7-6 win.

Abby Faulkner led the defensive charge to keep Hingham from tying things up, and also produced some quality scoring chances from her defensive position. Whitney Jaffe and Vicky Wade also had good chances to score, but came up short.

Thomson Jaffe made 9 saves to backstop the team to its win.

The Blue team dropped a 3-1 halftime lead and lost a 6-5 squeaker against a different Hingham squad. Cohasset was handicapped by a last-minute schedule change that kept several players - including most of its defense - from attending.

Amy Meikleham led the scoring effort with two goals, while Maddy Altholtz, Bridget Cahill and Olivia Sullivan added single scores.

Whitney Jaffe and Olivia Sullivan made seven saves between them, while splitting halves in the net.

At the 15-U level, Gabriella Flibotte's six-goal, one-assist effort powered Cohasset past Hingham 10-5. Maura Barnes added two goals and one assist, and Katelyn Ryan had two scores as Cohasset dominated despite having just one substitute for most of the game.

Thomson Jaffe made 9 stops in the Cohasset net to preserve the win.

All race proceeds got to the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund, named in honor of former Cohasset High Athletic Director Clark Chatterton, who lost his battle with cancer four years ago.

The Fund has already donated over $16,000 to several local causes and projects, among them the Milliken Field baseball renovation, the track and field discus cage at Alumni Field, the Cohasset Food Pantry, the CHS Athletic Trainor salary and the Presidential Class room at CHS.

This October, the Clark Chatterton Fund Committee will be sponsoring the first annual Clark Chattetonr Golf Scramble at Hatherly Country Club in Scituate.

"Being a part of something like this has been very exciting," said Cohasset High Athletic Director and Fund Committee member Ron Ford of the Chatterton Fund. "This has already gone way beyond what we originally thought, and it just keeps getting bigger and bigger."

Anyone interested in making donations to the fund should directly contact a Clark Chatterton Fund Committee member. The members are Ford, Deb Beal, Jack DeLorenzo, Deanna Mulligan, Phil Mahoney, Bob Durkin, Gary Vanderweil and Linda Bolster, the Fund's President.

Donations can also be mailed to PO Box 652, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Red Sox ticket raffle

The Cohasset Middle-High School Athletic Department is holding a Red Sox Ticket Raffle/E-Mail Auction.

Thanks to the generosity of Cohasset High School Graduate Phillip Mahoney (class of 1987), we will again run a fundraiser to assist the CMHS Athletic Department raising the funds necessary to provide the Athletic Training Services for our program. This year's fundraiser will involve two options. The first is a ticket raffle.

There will be ticket package prizes::

Four tickets to Red Sox vs. Tampa Bay Devil Rays , Wed. August 11 (right field box seats) value $176.

Four tickets to Red Sox vs. Anaheim Angels , Wed. Sept 1 (right field box seats) value $176.

The top two student ticket sellers will receive two tickets each to the Red Sox vs. Toronto Blue Jays Wed. August 18 (right field box seats) value $176.

Raffle tickets will cost $5 per ticket or $20 for a package of 5 tickets. All student-athletes in grades 7-12 will be given 10 tickets to sell.

Additional tickets are available and unused tickets should be turned into Mr. Ford's office.

E-mail auction

The second option is a silent auction for 4 tickets and 1 parking pass to the .406 Club to see the Red Sox play the Oakland A's on Tuesday, July 6th. The value of this package is $444. All auction bids can be emailed to Ron Ford, at rford@cohassetk12.org. All bidders will be updated as to the status of their bids.

All bidding and ticket sales will close on Friday, June 3 at 12:00 pm. The winners will be drawn at the High School Lunch Period at 12:15 pm on Friday, June 3 in the CMHS Cafeteria.

If you need any additional information please feel free to contact Athletic Director, Ron Ford at 781-383-6103.

CYBSA holding Calender Fundraiser

The Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Association is once again holding its Calendar Card fundraiser. Our baseball and softball players are all over town selling the calendar cards and helping to raise funds for the Little League. Last years efforts raised over $20,000 which was used to pay off the debt to the town for the new fields, as well as help purchase two new scoreboards, bleachers, and the building of the concession stand. This years drawings begin on Thursday, May 13th and continue until June 13th with weekday drawings of $50, weekend drawings of $150 and a final grand prize drawing of $1000 at the All-Star game and cookout. We thank all of our players, parents, friends and families for helping to make this Calendar Card fundraiser another BIG success!!. Good luck!!

South Shore Basketball shooting clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept registrations at Town Hall for an off-season basketball shooting clinic for boys and girls, grades 6 through 12.

The clinic will be coached by Paul-Michael Quintin and be limited to 15 participants in each of the two sessions. The fee for this program that will meet Tuesday and Thursday evenings from April 27 through June 3 is $115 per player.

Session I, for boys and girls grades 6 to 8, meets from 5 to 6:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School gym.

Co-Ed Basketball Clinic

This will be the eighth year that this instructional clinic will be offered to both boys and girls. This clinic is for any player who wants to learn, practice and improve all aspects of their game. Basic individual offensive and defense skills will be taught. Players will be placed on teams and will compete against players of similar ability. All participants are expected to understand that this week is a challenging week intended to teach all facets of the great game of basketball. Bring your lunch and good attitude. SSBC camps in Cohasset, Braintree & Hingham

HINGHAM, MASS (April 23, 2004) – The South Shore Baseball Club's popular summer camps for boys and girls from any city or town will be held once again at Cohasset, Braintree and Hingham.

"Cohasset, Braintree and Hingham are all great baseball towns and we all really enjoy having our camps there every summer," SSBC president/director Frank Niles Jr. said. "Our expert staff of qualified professionals wants these kids to enjoy the great game of baseball, as well as help them improve their skills. Every camper will enjoy a valuable and rewarding experience at any of the SSBC camps this summer."

All campers will be grouped according to age, ability, physical maturity and previous experience. Instructions will range from basic fundamentals to advanced skills. Each will play a minimum of one game per day.

Individual attention will be emphasized in all aspects of baseball. Pitching, catching, defense, base running, and hitting will be featured in special sessions and lectures. Any camper needing specific areas of improvement will receive special attention from SSBC's expert staff of qualified professional coaches.

The Cohasset camp for youngsters 5-12 will be held June 28-July 2 at Milliken Field.

The Braintree camp returns July 5-9 to Hollingsworth Park for campers 5 through 12.

The annual Hingham Summer Baseball Camp, offering four one-week sessions for players 5 to 15, will be held July 12-August 6 at Hingham High School. The camp is not restricted to Hingham residents.

"We really look forward to being there for four full weeks of baseball," Niles added. "The Hingham Camp is the highlight of our summer "

Sessions at all camps will be held Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m. and half-day sessions also will be available for 5 through 7 year olds.

SSBC is a full service, year-round club and training facility for baseball and softball players, ages 5 and older, in Hingham. For more information about SSBC or any of its summer camps call 1-800-GO4-HITS/(781) 749-6466 or visit SSBC's Web site at www.ssbc.com.

Ted Williams How to Hit Night For Parents, Coaches and Players

The Ted Williams League will sponsor several "free" how to hit a baseball nights at the Pembroke Community Center gym on route 14 in Pembroke center. They will be held on three consectutive Mondays, May 17 and 24 from 6:30 pm to 8:30 pm.

The symposiums will feature the number one teacher of the Ted Williams theory of hitting, Steve Ferroli. "Ferroli knows more about my principles of hitting than anyone I've ever been with". (Ted Williams 1994)

Parents, coaches and players of all ages and skill levels are welcome to watch and listen or ask questions at this free public conversation directed torward the hardest thing to do in sports - hitting a baseball. This year players 8-12 that are pre registered will get a chance to hit in the batting cage.

Don't miss out on a night sure to enrich and enlighten anyones approach to hitting a baseball as author and batting instructor Steve Ferroli relays the thoughts and moves of major league baseball's last .400 hitter.

Hot dogs, drinks and general concession will be available for purchase during the entire program.

To register please call (781) 293-2700 and leave your name, the amount of people in your party, the symposium date you wish to attend, your phone number and if you have a player between 8-12 that wishes to hit that evening.

Seating is limited to call in reservations on a first come first serve basis.

IT'S HAPPENING

Chamber music concert

Members of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will present a Chamber Music Concert at the First Parish Meeting House on the Common in Cohasset on Sunday afternoon, May 16, at 4 p.m.

The concert features a string trio - violin, viola and cello - performing three selections including Mozart; Bernhard Henrik Crusell's quartet Opus 2 in E-flat major for clarinet, violin, viola and cello, and Crusell's solos for clarinet performed by Kai-Yun Lu.

Tickets are $15 available at the door or by calling the First Parish office Monday to Thursday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 781-383-1100.

Free conference on senior housing

A free conference, "Housing That Works; A Conference for Older Adults Considering a Move" will be held Friday, June 4, from 10 a.m. – 3 p.m. at the Senior Center at Hingham Town Hall.

The full-day conference of lectures, workshops and a trade show will offer information about housing choices and ways to minimize the stress of moving. Seniors and children of seniors facing the possibility of a future move are invited to attend.

The morning session will consist of several panels: Selling Your Home – how to simplify the process, and Profiles in Housing – information about different senior housing options. Afternoon panels will discuss: Title 5 septic regulations ("It's in the Tank") and The Rent is Due - financing options for the various types of housing.

Following the panel discussions will be a free lunch and a tradeshow (1-3 p.m.) where conference participants will have an opportunity to meet representatives from many local senior housing communities, and professionals who provide services to help seniors have a stress-free move. In addition special raffle prizes will be offered from many local businesses.

The conference is sponsored by Cohasset Elder Affairs and the Hingham Department of Elder Services, with support from the Allerton House of Hingham, Linden Ponds at Hingham, and the Transitions Program of Home Center Real Estate in Hingham. Pre-registration is required by May 28. Call the Hingham Department of Elder Services at 781-741-1458 or Cohasset Elder Affairs, 781-383-9112.

Ladies' Night Out Wine Tasting set

A festive Ladies' Night Out Wine Tasting will be held from 7:30 to 10 p.m. on May 14, at Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum, 100 Sohier St., Cohasset.

Proceeds will benefit the regional museum. Primary construction has been completed, the playground is scheduled for a June installation and major exhibits are now in the planning stage.

The wines for this event will come from "down under," courtesy of New Zealand's Tim Fogarty from the House of Nobilo and Australia's Tony Charley representing Banrock Station. Amyra Chase of Cohasset Village Wine and Spirits will assist with the presentation.

Local restaurants and caterers will supply hors d'oeuvres and the museum's Scituate town committee has put together fabulous baskets for a raffle. Themes include spa, tennis, gourmet chowder and many more.

To reserve tickets at $45, send checks to Our World, P.O. Box 422, Cohasset MA 02025 or call 781-383-3198.

League annual meeting May 18

The Social Service League of Cohasset, Inc. will hold its annual meeting on Tuesday, May 18, at 9 a.m. The meeting will take place in Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephens Church at 16 Highland Ave.

Barbecue following Memorial Day Parade

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation is pleased to invite everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade May 31, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the seventh year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and CLC expects to serve more than 1000 people again.

For further information please contact R. M. Campbell, President of CLC, at 383-0025.

Goldberg in concert

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church is presenting noted soprano Leslie Ann Goldberg in a recital on Sunday, May 16 at 3 p.m. Dr. Goldberg is noted for her interpretation of French and Russian art song and is a faculty member at both Bridgewater State College and Stonehill College. She is also a frequent presenter for the Orff Schullwerk Conference and had received the Outstanding Woman Award from the Women's Resource Center and is an active vocal coach for choral and theatre groups. The May 16 concert is slightly unusual, for it will feature works for soprano and organ, and accompanying the program will be Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky in works of Vierne, Schutz and Pinkham, among others.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset and ample parking is available at the nearby village car park. St. Stephen's is handicap accessible and the program is free of charge, although donations are accepted. A playing of the bells of the St. Stephen's carillon will take place a half hour before the concert.

For more information, please call 781-383-1083.

Ice show coming

The Skating Club of Hingham will present its annual ice show May 15, at 2 p.m. and 6 p.m. at the Pilgrim Skating Arena in Hingham. This year's show theme, "Movie Magic," is a tribute to songs from some of the favorite movies of all time.

More than 80 skaters from ages 4 through 70 will perform group and solo numbers to music from "Annie," "Peter Pan" Wizard of Oz," "Singing In the Rain," "Brother Bear," "Grease" and much more. The show will feature 15 solo numbers by members of the club, including four of its graduating seniors, Calla Davenport of Hull, Mallory Harvey of So. Weymouth, Lauren Caruso of Hanover and Molly Devine of Braintree. In addition, guest pairs skaters Lara and Neill Shelton of Wayland, national championship alternates, will perform to "Escape," and former Scottish National Champion Ian Macadam of Braintree will skate to "Sing, Sing, Sing."

Tickets to the show are available at the door of Pilgrim Arena, 75 Recreation Road, and are $5 for adults, $3 for children under 12 and seniors. For more information call the Skating Club of Hingham at 781-741-8194.

Recalling life on Peddocks Island

On May 19, the Cohasset Historical Society welcomes Leslie Silvia as the guest speaker for its final installment of the Spring Lecture Series. Prior to her death, Leslie's mother, Matilda Silvia, wrote a touching memoir of her family's life on Peddocks Island.

This 188-acre bit of land on the outskirts of Boston Harbor, was home to the Silvia family from 1904 to 2001 when it was purchased by the Metropolitan District Commission. For many years it was also home to Portuguese immigrants as Fort Andrews. Silvia breaths life into every day events, commemorates New England military history, and celebrates the strong binds of family and community. Leslie Silvia, who worked closely with the publisher to finish the memoir, will discuss the stories of her family's past which are rich in both local and family history. This event will be held at the Historical Society's headquarters, the Pratt Building, 100 South Main St., Cohasset, at 7:30 p.m.

Society members invite the public to join them for this special evening. The lecture is free and light refreshment will be served. For additional information, call the Cohasset Historical Society at 781-383-1434.

Parents pitch in to make prom, graduation special

By Mary Sheppard
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In Cohasset where many high school seniors have been together since kindergarten and graduating classes usually number less than 100 students, a special bond tends to form by the end of the senior year. Graduation can be a bittersweet time as students realize their time spent as a class is coming to a close.

But thanks to a group of parents, the "pre-prom gala" on the town common and the commencement reception have become annual traditions helping to make graduation even more memorable.

Like many of Cohasset's school-related activities begun by parents, they started with an idea and no fiscal backing.

Jean Reidy of Wheelwright Farm, assisted by several other parents of seniors that year, helped organize the first pre-prom reception in 1990 when her twin boys were graduating.

"My oldest son had graduated in 1987," Reidy said. "I remember that on prom night, he had spent hours driving around to different houses and getting pictures taken. I also remember how hard it was for me to get descriptions of what the girls wore because that's so important to know! Trying to get that out of my son was almost impossible.

"I thought how great it would be for all of us if the seniors as a class could congregate in one place for pictures. It would also alleviate a lot of driving around before prom," she said.

With a nod from the high school, Reidy and her committee organized the first pre-prom reception at the South Shore Art Center in 1990.

"I think the graduating class that year was about 70," she recalled. "Some of the kids arrived in 'limos,' some came in cars. We kept it simple and all the parents chipped in – 100 percent involvement.

"It turned out to be a great event with everyone helping because no one had to do too much," Reidy said. "Decorations and food consisted of balloons and crepe paper, cheese, crackers, fruit and a punch and it went on for about two hours. I think the whole class was there and of course, the parents with their cameras."

JoAnne Chittick, a committee member, reminded Reidy of the hustle that senior class officer parents had to do, once the graduates left for prom. The art center had to be cleaned up, then the race home to change clothes and get to where prom that year was held in order to chaperone the dance.

"But it was so much fun," Reidy laughed. "A lot of great memories."

She said that the best part of the event was that everyone was included. "Prom night usually meant that many of the kids were separated from each other. Before and after prom, everyone got in their cars and went to private homes or just rode around in cars. This way, it honored the class for one of their last times as a class."

Then after the prom in those years, seniors usually congregated on Sandy Beach, which kept police busy chasing them off as that wasn't allowed — far different than the greatly organized and creative post-prom party of today.

"The kids would leave and drive around in their cars," Reidy recalled. "That, to parents, presented more of a risk. A few of us decided to go to the police station before prom night and asked permission for the kids to stay at the beach so we at least knew where they were and that they weren't on the roads. The police okayed it and in addition, would periodically check on them."

Breakfast at 6 a.m. at the Unitarian Parish House was also conceived during this era.

"I remember getting rolls from Stop &Shop," Reidy said. "And the rest of it parents did. Everyone had an item to bring to the Parish House – eggs, bacon, fruit. It was never too difficult because all the parents chipped in."

Laraine Langford, Lindsay Grossman, Kelly Holway, Sarah Brady, Kim Ulmer, Nell Brewer, Rachel Smith, Sarah Hassan, Nicole Needle, Maura O'Brien and Alexis Bugley look beautiful at last year's pre-prom gala on the common.

As the years progressed and graduating classes were larger, pre-prom was moved from the art center to the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island and recently, to the Cohasset Common.

Today, prom night for Cohasset High School seniors is a much anticipated and well-planned event, beginning with pre-prom gala on the common and ending at 5 a.m. the next morning with the winding down of the post-prom party. This year, prom night starts at 5 p.m., Friday, May 28 with the pre-prom gala on the common. All are encouraged to bring cameras.

At 1:30 p.m. Saturday, June 5, the Class of 2004 graduates at the Music Circus on Sohier Street. In addition to families and friends, the public is welcome to attend as there are plenty of seats.

Sue McNamara of Beach Street was the active organizer of the first graduation reception, also now a Cohasset tradition. McNamara is quick to tell of the parents and school personnel who lent tremendous assistance — the late Clark Chatterton, Meg Gallagher (who was principal in 1988), Karen Kirkendall, Laurie Hamilton, and many junior class parents who hosted this senior reception and passed the tradition to the next class.

"Until 1988, after the graduation ceremony at the Music Circus people left pretty quickly to attend private parties," McNamara recalls. "We instead wanted to create a festive, communal venue immediately afterward that included the whole class so they could take time with teachers and administrators and parents could mingle, celebrate the event together, and offer thanks to teachers and good wishes to the graduates."

Food and paper goods were all donated by parents, she said.

"Really the only thing that gave us any sort of problem was the sun melting the food," McNamara said. "Outside of that, we'd always hoped that what we started that year would remain a tradition passed from one class to another, year after year."

Although Sue McNamara stopped being involved on an organizational level when her youngest graduated in 1996, she still enjoys the pre-prom event as well as graduation.

"I enjoy it all," she said. "It's one of the personal touches of living in a small town."

The secret revealed by Russell Lightbody of Framingham

"I'm a long-time user of hearing aids and have just recently purchased your smallest Audibel aids (fantastic). I can now hear and enjoy talking to people and especially on the phone to my grandchildren, which I had trouble hearing before. The hearing aids are everything that they are supposed to be. I am very pleased. I really liked the Hearing Consultant. He was friendly and knows his product. I'm hearing much better now."

Walk the Rails for Habitat

On May 31, Memorial Day, Habitat for Humanity will sponsor a Walk the Rails tour on a recently cleared section of the Greenbush Railway corridor between Hingham and Cohasset. The suggested start time for the walk is between 9 and 10 a.m., with the railway corridor open until 2 p.m.

This is a unique and limited opportunity to walk on the former and future railway bed stretching in a near straight line from Hingham to Cohasset Center. Walkers are requested to register and begin their walk at the former site of the Hingham Lumber Company at 190 Summer St., Hingham, which is just off of Route 3A south of the Hingham rotary. Ample parking will be available at the registration site. For those who prefer or are unable to make the full walk, van service will be available to come back to the parking area from Route 228 and Cohasset Center. In the area of the Walk, the rail bed is wide and flat and free of rails and railway ties.

The Hingham Committee of South Shore Habitat for Humanity (SSHH) secured the approval for the Walk from the Cashman Balfour Beatty Company which is the contractor for the rebuilding of the Greenbush Line. The chairperson for this walk is Robert Broker and the Chairperson for the Hingham Committee is Jack Linskey. They request your early registration to assure sufficient volunteers will be available to assist you on the walk or with van service. Registration may be made by email at rail sforhabitat@verizon. net or by calling 781-749-3788. Leave your name and the number of persons walking. The local committee of SSHH is requesting a donation of $10 for adults and $5 for youth with children walking free.

For railway and nature enthusiasts this is a rare opportunity to see "off the road" and little known areas of Hingham including Foundry Pond above the dam, the Weir River below Weir River Farm as it crosses into Foundry Pond, a view of the old Hingham quarries, and the rear grounds of Glastonbury Abbey. Below Route 228, the corridor passes along the side of the Cohasset Country Club and Woodside Cemetery, concluding with the extensive off road area leading into Cohasset Center. The route ends some three and a half miles south next to the South Shore Arts Center and the Pleasant Street Grille. Several restaurants in Cohasset are within a short distance.

On the left - Robert Broker, chair for the walk. On the right - Jack Linskey, chair for the Hingham Committee for SSHH The photo was taken by Steve Waynem on the Greenbush corridor off of Eldridge Court in Hingham, just south of Water Street.

For those who prefer or are unable to make the full walk, van service will be available to come back to the parking area from Route 228 and Cohasset Center.

The South Shore's "Little Dig" has created a wonderful opportunity for people of all ages to explore the site of the former and future Greenbush Railway. This historic commuter line, once part of the Old Colony Railroad system opened in the mid 1840's and has been closed since 1958. It is expected to open once again in 2006. The restored Greenbush line terminates in Scituate running north from there through Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, and on to Braintree where it connects with the other two recently opened lines from Middleborough and Plymouth, before heading for Boston. During the next year construction activity is planned to increase significantly.

Walk the Rails will benefit the efforts of the Hingham Committee of SSHH to build a single family home on Central Street in Hingham. The Hingham Town Meeting set aside this plot of land for affordable housing with Habitat selected by the Town to develop that property. Currently, the Town is developing an extended lease with SSHH for this purpose.

Biodiversity Days in Appleton Field

The First Herring Brook Watershed Initiative is planning several fun events to celebrate Scituate's Biodiversity Days starting with a visit to the Appleton Field near the South Swamp on Saturday, May 15 from 9:30 a.m. - 12 noon.

The Appleton Field is one of the few remaining large, inland, natural open field habitats, still surrounded by undeveloped land, left in Scituate. It is a scenic area full of bird life as well as many species of dragonflies and wild flowers, and it was recently purchased by the Town of Scituate with Community Preservation Act Funds. .

Bring your binoculars and cameras as local naturalists will be on hand with identification manuals and supplies to help identify and document findings. .

Meet at the Mount Hope Improvement Society Building at the corner of Clapp Road and Cedar Street in Scituate's West End at 9:30 a.m. Suggested donation is $3 and long pants are recommended..

Holly Hill Farm educational events for adults & kids

The Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc. announce the Spring and Summer 2004 schedule of its Organic Gardening Workshop and Family Farm series. For adults looking to expand their knowledge of organic gardening or parents seeking activities for their children, the series events are designed to offer broad appeal to young and old alike. More information about Holly Hill Farm and The Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc. is available at www.hollyhillfarm.org

Organic Gardening Workshop Series Schedule

All workshops begin at 10 a.m. and end at noon, and admission for each varies.

Growing Organic Seedlings, Saturday, May 15

Learn how to successfully grow vegetables and flowers from seed. At this hands-on workshop, find out about potting mixes, containers, seed sources, planning seeds, and watering techniques. Plant a flat of seeds to take home. Seeds are provided but attendees are welcome to their own seed. (Cost: FHHF members $20; non-members $25)

Bees Buzz, Saturday, June 26

There are 20 hives on the farm producing honey that is sold at the farm and helps the farm's vegetables with pollination. The farm's expert apiarist, Luke Lambert, will guide attendees through the fascinating life of a bee on the farm, in its hive and the importance of bees in nature. (Cost: FHHF members $12; non-members $15)

Painting an Organic Landscape, July 10, 17 & 24

Local landscape painter, Sage Green Belber, will guide a group of intermediate to advanced painters in their preferred medium as they create a landscape from a scenic vista at the farm. Sage and the other painters will talk about their work and offer one another constructive critique. Cost includes all workshops and hours are negotiable to continue with your painting. Please call if you need an easel or other materials. (Cost: FHHF members $40; non-members $50)

Growing and Cooking with Herbs, Saturday July 31

Learn to grow culinary herbs - in a garden, in containers on the porch, or even indoors on a windowsill. Take a "tasting tour" of the farm's herb garden and learn to identify plants by their distinct flavors and aromas. Find out how to grow both annual and perennial herbs — from preparing the soil, to harvesting for the kitchen. Take home new recipes and learn how to dry and store fresh herbs for winter use. (Cost: FHHF members $20; non-members $25)

Growing Organic Cut Flowers, Saturday, Aug. 28

Delphinium, Cosmos and Echinacea to name a few: learn all about growing cut flowers in a home garden. Topics range from seed sources to sowing tips. Attendees will practice deadheading and harvesting and will make a bouquet to take home. (Cost: FHHF members $20; non-members $25)

Family Farm Series Schedule

Family Farming, Saturday, June 5

Parents and children are welcome to come and learn how to grow seedlings at home. Attendees will tour the farm's greenhouse, and learn about different containers, potting mix, and seed sources. They will plant some seeds to take home using recycled home materials. Supplies and seeds provided. (Cost: FHHF members $20 per family; non-members $24 per family)

Family Farm Tour, Saturday, Aug. 14

Farmer Jean White will lead a guided tour around the farm, with visits to the greenhouse and growing fields. Attendees will also get to meet the farm animals. (Cost: FHHF members $12 per family; non-members $15 per family)

For additional information and registration, contact Jon Belber by phone at 781-383-1455 or by email at jbelberhollyhill@hotmail.com.

A Funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony Church in Cohasset. Interment was in St. Joseph Cemetery, W. Roxbury.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

WORSHIP NOTES

Celebrate the Family' at Mormon Church

The world can be a scary place for families today. Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints plan to share some of the family strengthening programs that have been used by its members for the past 80 years with Boston's South Shore Communities on May 22, between 1 and 5 p.m.

"We recently completed a major addition to our building at 379 Gardner St.,, in Hingham", says Bishop Leif Erickson, of Norwell. "As a congregation, we wanted to think of a way to celebrate this milestone with the community at large. We decided that we would 'celebrate the family' by sharing programs that are important to our church that can easily be used by members of all faiths to strengthen families."

Open house attendees will be taught how to organize and conduct regular weekly family activity nights with their own families during presentations that will begin every half-hour. A non-denominational, non-political, multicultural manual featuring stories and visual aids from around the world can be taken home as a gift and a guide. For information contact Holly Andrus at 781-749-2661.

LDS Family History Center open house

A refurbished and expanded family history facility will be introduced to the public at an open house on May 22, from 1 to 5 p.m. at the recently completed addition to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints building at 379 Gardner St. in Hingham. Laptops will be available to show how computer programs can be used to organize genealogical information and free four-generation record keeping kits will be available. In addition, brief introductory workshops will address:

How do I begin my family history?

How do I obtain copies of vital records for my research?

How can I use the internet as a research tool?

In addition, heritage album experts will highlight methods for preserving priceless pictures and documents. Of special note is an 8-foot by 22-foot display that features the descendents of early Massachusetts's colonist Anne Hutchinson.

The Center, which is staffed by volunteers, is a branch of the world's largest genealogical records depository in Salt Lake City, Utah. Volunteer staff members offer free technical assistance to those who would like to begin or continue family genealogical research. Materials can be borrowed from the central library and used in the Hingham Branch location for a small fee. The Library features access to genealogy websites on the Internet and a large number of indexes are available on site. "It is tremendously satisfying to uncover your roots and learn more about where you come from," says Center Director, Joan Chatfield of Norwell. "According to American Demographics Magazine, genealogy is the second most popular hobby in the United States, after gardening." "We are fortunate," says Family History Consultant Coordinator, Jennifer Ashley, of Hull, "to have such an enthusiastic group of volunteers available to help people get started."

The open house will also feature brief presentations on how to organize and conduct weekly family activity nights. Further questions should be directed to Holly Andrus at 781-749-2661.

RECRUITING PROBLEMS

People with sensorineural (nerve-related) hearing loss may suffer from "recruitment" (when sound is perceived as getting too loud too fast). As a result, a person tells you to speak up because he or she cannot hear you, and then tells you there is no need to shout. Recruitment gets its name from the fact that this hearing problem involves having the brain "recruiting" hair cells from an adjacent frequency band to compensate for dead hair cells. The hair cells of the inner ear are sensory cells responsible for converting the mechanical force of sound waves into electrical signals that are sent to the brain. When hair cells are recruited from adjacent bands, sounds are perceived as being louder than normal.

The first step toward better hearing is recognizing that a hearing problem exists. Having your hearing tested is the second step. If the signs are there—asking people to repeat themselves, turning up the volume on the TV, or frequently misunderstanding what is being said—please call us at 781-337-1144. We have the answers to many of the questions you'll no doubt have regarding your hearing impairment. From fittings to follow-up care from a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist, you can rely on FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth.

P.S. Hearing instrument users who suffer from recruitment require instruments with compression circuits which limit the amount of amplification at certain levels.

Letting the flowers tell the story

Literary License show a success

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With flower arrangements large and small gracing every room, and a fragrant scent wafting through the air, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has never been filled with as many flowers as it was for last week's Literary License Flower Show, sponsored by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

Using literature as a source of inspiration, registered Garden Club Federation members from Cohasset and the surrounding towns used flowers to express what the written word means to them. Because it was a Standard Flower Show, all entries conformed to the guidelines established by various national and federal garden clubs.

In addition to showcasing the talents of arrangers, the show served as a celebration of the building's renovations, which were completed last March, giving community members who haven't had the opportunity to see its expansion an excuse to stop by.

Maureen Byrne, general chairman of the show, said visitor turnout was wonderful, with a constant flow of guests throughout both days. "People have come here from all over," she said, including the towns of Norwell, Scituate, Quincy and

Dispatchers claim sexual harassment

File complaints with the MCAD

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In addition to fielding 9-1-1 calls, two former civilian dispatchers, both female, allege they had to handle more at Cohasset police headquarters than emergencies from the public.

Both women filed complaints with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination claiming they were sexually harassed on the job, although the circumstances they describe are vastly different.

Barbara DeWolfe claims she was fired after requesting a stress leave due to harassment allegedly inflicted on her by a sergeant who regularly shared her shift.

And Adrienne Davenport quit after she said she was falsely charged with having "too intimate" a relationship with a police officer while both were on duty.

"We believe this is a clear-cut case of sexual harassment."
— Jill Goodman, attorney for Barbara DeWolfe

The accusations, which are now becoming public, can't be good news for the police department which continues to be

$50K-plus Haddad settlement inked

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Former Town Manager Mark Haddad will be receiving a structured settlement of $50,000 and coverage of health insurance costs for the next six months.

That's the agreement the board of selectmen reached with the former town manager who abruptly resigned two weeks ago. The $50,000 is being paid for accrued benefits, including vacation and sick time, and is roughly what Haddad would have received for six months of his salary.

At the time Haddad resigned, he was making about $110,000 a year.

Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley said Haddad will continue to pay his 30 percent share of the insurance cost, and he believes the cost per month on the town's side will be roughly $800 a month for a family plan.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said there were some contractual disputes that needed to be taken care of before an agreement could be finalized.

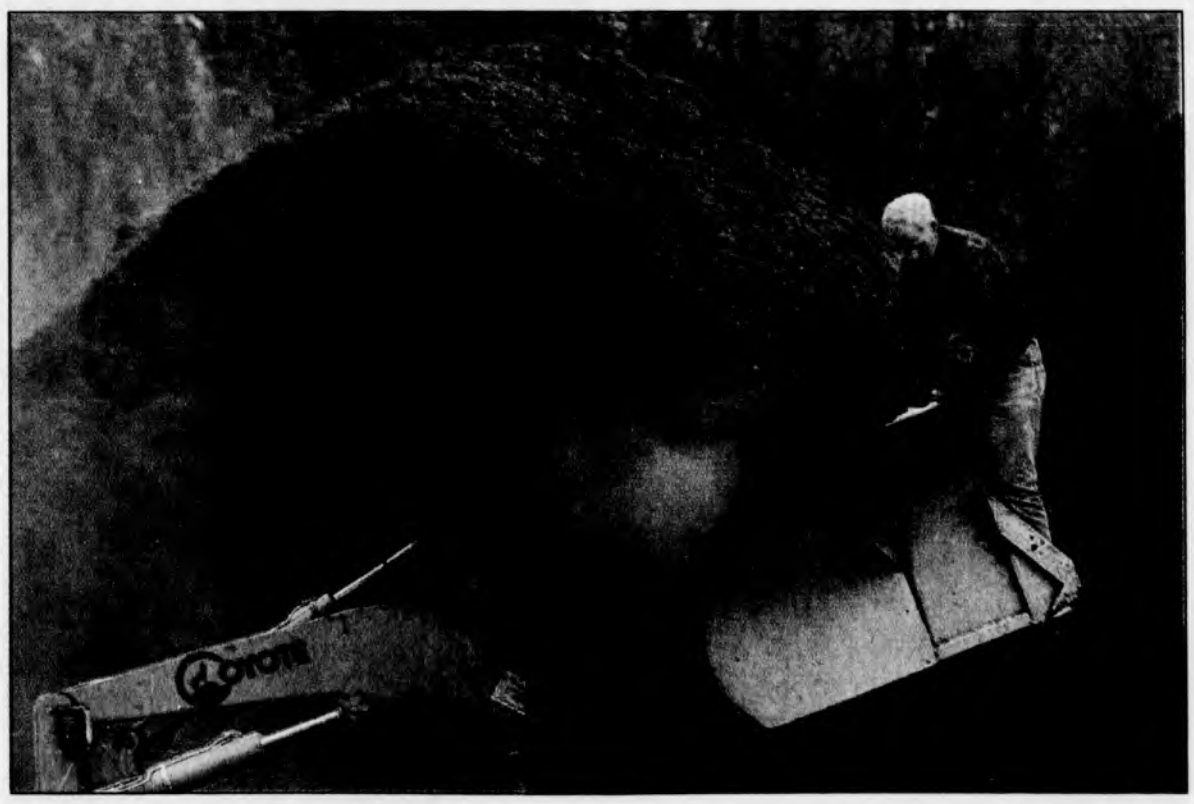
GSA raises awareness and acceptance at CHS

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Making it through the teenage years is never easy, and for those teens who are dealing with questions regarding sexuality, it may seem as if finding peers who will be supportive and understanding are few and far between.



But not in Cohasset where a group of high school students has banded together to form a Gay Straight Alliance, and are working together to raise awareness in the hopes that their message of acceptance and support will be the motto of everyone who walks down the halls.

Since last year, members of the GSA have been meeting over lunch twice a week to talk about various issues. Sometimes it's politics, such as same-sex marriage and how it is being handled at the state level, sometimes it's about what's going on at school, and sometimes it's just to have a nice small group of people to eat with. Currently, the GSA has four students who attend regularly, including Adam Chang, Maricel Prou, Katie Jensen and John Rhorer. All four students are sophomores.

"Since we started, the major transition that's occurred is the change in speech. Kids have gone from saying, 'that's so gay,' to 'that's so stupid'."
— Adam Chang, sophomore

Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill, who has been involved with getting the GSA up and running since its inception, said the group is comprised of gay and straight students working toward the same goal, and students are not asked to share their orientation. "It's not about that, it's about opening the lines of acceptance," he said, and members say they have seen a change in the culture at the high

Bus figure correction

A story in last week's Mariner reported the town will save roughly $38,000 due to lower bid prices on a mini bus for the school district, but the savings will actually be $9,234. The Mariner regrets the error.

Contacting MBTA

Joe Nolan and Eric Fleming of the MBTA said any resident in Cohasset who has questions about the Greenbush project can call the MBTA's 24-hour hotline at (781) 682-6350, or visit the web site at www.cbbgreenbush.com. The site includes route maps, construction schedules and updates, and visitors can sign up for e-mail updates to stay abreast of the latest construction anywhere on the line.

Perc tests at the Music Circus

Developers for the Cook Estate property have begun testing the soils a little bit closer to the development site, as perc tests were conducted in the parking lot of the Music Circus Wednesday morning. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, who has taken on the duties associated with being the point person for the project in light of former Town Manager Mark Haddad's resignation, said this is another option that is being explored, but nothing, including having a leeching field behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has been ruled out as of yet.

Sullivan said testing on the site will help the town determine "what is viable and what isn't," and he hopes to have some definitive answers for the project within the next few weeks.

Fox 25 Zip Trips comes to town

The FOX 25 Morning News team is coming to Cohasset for a live broadcast Thursday morning (today) and will be filming in front of Town Hall. Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley said he was contacted Tuesday morning by the station, who asked his permission to broadcast Thursday from 6-9 a.m. Buckley said after giving permission Tuesday, helicopters were busy flying over the town, taking footage to be used for the broadcast.

Every Thursday morning, the station goes on the air live from different towns and cities across New England and Buckley said Cohasset was chosen because it is a very picturesque town and also has a lot going on that can be discussed during the broadcast. Buckley said both the Music Circus and South Shore Art Center will be featured, and Cohasset resident and Boston Bruins General Manager Mike O'Connell will be interviewed.

Still searching for Veterans' names

The Veterans Memorial Committee is compiling a list of Cohasset residents who served in both the Korean and Vietnam Wars to be included on a new memorial at Veterans Park on Cohasset harbor. If you know of any names that should be included on either list, or the names of those who have served in the Public Health Service or Merchant Marine, please contact Glenn Pratt either via e-mail at gpratt@suburbancompanies.com or by mail at Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee c/o Glenn Pratt, 482 King Street, Cohasset MA 02025.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Only at Dover Rug will you find one of the most diverse selections of rugs and carpeting in New England... today! Every rug in our multitude of collections is a masterwork of styling and textural magnificence, created from a wealth of inspiration past and present.

Tufenkian strives to create surprising beauty by constantly mixing in new colors and drawing on new design inspirations to create his distinctive textures and moods. Tufenkian's design always refers somehow to the familiar, although often in a dream-like, iconographic way. The style is relaxed and elegant, spare and confident. Because of this, Tufenkian Tibetan Carpets are comfortable, never contrived or overly formal.

Downtown changes could increase costs

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Downtown Revitalization Review Committee held its first meeting this morning and while the group has much support from those who would still like to see changes made to the downtown streetscape plans, any alterations will come with a price.

The committee was appointed by Selectmen last week and is charged with reviewing plans already drafted by the Waterfield Design Group, which was hired to design the new streetscape as part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project. The project has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for by grants and private donations, and the discussions surrounding the design of the Village streetscape have been going on for two and a half years.

The committee will investigate solutions to concerns expressed by members of the planning board, board of selectmen, residents and merchants. The review committee has been meeting to take another look at the plans for the project, and feels with a 50-year project such as the village streetscape, the more eyes the better.

The design group says it is more than willing to help the town reach a consensus for the downtown design and answer any questions moving forward. However, Craig Miller, principal for the Waterfield Design Group, sent a letter to former Town Manager Mark Haddad outlining the hourly charges the town will see for all additional work. Hourly rates for key personnel are: Miller $121.50; Chief Landscape Architect Dennis Dale $95.85; Project Manager, LA, Lisa Bailey $91.34; Chief Civil Engineer Cliff Carlson $123.34; Project Manager, Civil, Mike Rademacher $94.50; Senior Electrical Engineer Clyde Kay $94.50.

"The streetscape work in this phase includes, but is not limited to, meeting with the proposed Project Coordination and Oversight Committee to review and advise their requests for changes in the project limits, scope, and materials, and to perform document revisions as necessary based on those changes adopted by the Board of Selectmen," the letter states.

Waterfield has also contracted with the town to complete work on the James Brook Flood Project. Due to some concerns over varying engineering reports, the town asked to have meetings between members of both Waterfield and Tutela Engineering as well as John Modzelewski, the town's engineering consultant, and Planning Board member Peter Pratt. Any other representatives the town may designate are also welcome to attend, and for every meeting the town holds, it will receive a bill.

Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley said the town also signed a contract with Waterfield in October of 2002 for $120,000, which will be used to cover costs for Kristina Patterson, the Cohasset Greenbush Ombudsman who also works as a landscape architect for the firm.

"Kristina serves as the ombudsman on an as-needed basis," said Miller, adding at the beginning, the town did not require her services as frequently as it will when construction gets underway. "She gets paid for any time she puts in," but if the town doesn't require her services, she doesn't work and therefore doesn't get paid. "It's a very flexible arrangement that works out very well," he said.

Buckley said the town pays Waterfield for Patterson's services and the money is reimbursed by the MBTA as part of the mitigation agreement. Work on the James Brook project, which is slated to cost $1 million, will be reimbursed by the MBTA as well.

Because the date to begin construction is getting closer every day, Miller said it might be time to shift gears in terms of Patterson's role and turn it into a more proactive position. Until very recently, Miller said Patterson had received her direction mostly from former Town Manager Mark Haddad and Miller said he became concerned when he heard the Board of Selectmen had questions about Patterson's effectiveness.

"As far as we knew from Mark, he was very pleased with her work," he said, but he and Patterson think this could be a great time to revisit what Patterson's charge should be and see what the board would like to do going forward. The Selectmen will bring that topic up again at a meeting within the next few weeks.

Memorial returned to island

The POW-MIA Memorial is back at the top of Depot Court temporarily.

Members of the American Legion will be happy to see the MIA/POW memorial has been temporarily returned to the corner of South Main Street and Depot Court, just in time for Memorial Day.

While employees of the Department of Public Works have not yet completed the work to be done on the island, the first steps to beautify the area are already taking shape. A decorative whiskey barrel has been placed where the island will be, and serves as a planter for red geraniums. The white pole supporting the MIA/POW sign stretches upward from the center of the barrel.

"We wanted something restored for the parade, but it's still a work in progress," said Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley. While the temporary memorial will have to be taken down the day after the parade, talks will begin soon regarding what the permanent memorial will look like and where it will be.

The memorial island was removed last summer to allow for testing of proposed "bump-outs" in the downtown area. Bump-outs are extended portions of sidewalk that would allow a pedestrian more visibility beyond parked cars while still standing on the sidewalk, and were incorporated as a safety feature in the downtown streetscape plans designed by the Waterfield group.

When it was decided painted lines for the bump-outs didn't seem to give motorists enough of an idea what the bump-puts would look like, then Town Manager Mark Haddad asked selectmen to approve temporarily placing sandbags or traffic delineators on the perimeters of where the bump-outs would be, to give drivers a real sense of how the road might change. In order to accommodate for marking the bump-outs, the island needed to be removed.

Both residents and merchants came to selectmen's meetings in opposition of the bump-outs, and said it would not only take away the charm and character of the village, but would make the already narrow street even more so. Bump-outs were eventually voted down by selectmen.

But even with the bump-outs gone, there was still some question as to where and when the memorial island should return. Haddad suggested the memorial be replaced during the streetscape renovations, to avoid having to put the asphalt down, tear it up when the streetscape work is done, then replace it again. There was also talk among selectmen about maybe moving the island to another location, perhaps on the opposite side of the street next to the South Shore Community Center. Since then, it has also been suggested the memorial be rebuilt where the bus hut, which is slated to be torn down, currently stands.
